Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, the 8th day of January is a legal holiday in the State of Louisiana. Our people are proud of the heritage of the great battle fought on our soil, sanctified by the heroism of our sons and those of Tennessee, Kentucky, and other American patriots. The admirable address made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], appropriate to the day and to the current discussion, inspires me to add a few remarks upon that great event, and especially to bring before the House a reminder of a measure that has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Library for the completion of a monument on the battlefield of Chalmette, the scene of the battle of New Orleans, a shaft designed to commemorate that great event. This report states the purpose of the bill I had the honor to introduce, to accept the cession to the United States of the Chalmette monument and grounds, and to appropriate the sum of $25,000 with which to complete the monument located thereon, under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall appoint a commission composed of three persons to recommend a suitable design for the completion of said monument, with such inscriptions and emblems as may properly commemorate the valor and sacrifices of the American Army in the battle of New Orleans. When said monument shall have been completed the care and keeping of same, and of the grounds surrounding it, subject to such other control as the Secretary of War may determine, shall remain with the United States Daughters of 1776 and 1812, a corporation of the city of New Orleans.

The Chalmette monument was begun by the Jackson Monument Association in 1855, and is located upon a parcel of land in the parish of St. Bernard, in the State of Louisiana, facing the Mississippi River and southeast of the city of New Orleans, measuring about 1 acre front, and comprises a part of the Chalmette battle ground.

The accepted design consisted of a plain shaft 142 feet high, 16 feet 8 inches square at the base, and 12 feet 6 inches at the top. The work was partially erected in accordance with the specifications annexed to the contract. The shaft as it stands to-day is 56 feet 10 inches high. It will thus be seen that the monument lacks 85 feet of being built to its originally planned height. In its present incomplete state the top is covered over with a plain board deck, with the result that it is insignificant in height, unsymmetrical in proportion, and belittles rather than fittingly memorializes a great event in our history. The monument is not only plainly visible from the Mississippi and in view of all passing vessels from New Orleans to the Gulf, but because of its proximity to the city and being built upon a part of the battlefield and near Chalmette Cemetery, the locality is visited by thousands of tourists and pleasure seekers. An additional advantage secured by passing the proposed bill is that vesting the title of the monument grounds in the United States Government gives it more than an acre of ground within a few hundred feet of Chalmette Cemetery, making it feasible to connect the two properties, enlarge the cemetery, and combine both in a perpetual memorial of the battle of New Orleans.

The project commends itself apart from its intrinsic merit, because what has already been done is the result of private subscription, and commends those who first help themselves to assistance from the Government.

Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasing and appropriate duty, in behalf of the State of Louisiana, to press upon the attention of Congress the erection of this monument in honor of the signal victory achieved by the American arms under the leadership of the immortal Jackson upon the plains of Chalmette, near the city of New Orleans, on the 8th of January, 1815. Jackson won many victories in peace and in war, but, great as was his military genius and civic capacity, the student of history will find in his defense of Louisiana, beginning with his arrival on the 1st of December, 1814, to the final repulse and collapse of the British invasion, the highest proofs of a military capacity which will always give him rank among the great captains of the world. His very presence was an inspiration. Doubt, fear, discord, insubordination vanished before his presence and resistless energy. He was confronted by a superior force of veterans, schooled by the great Duke of Wellington in the peninsular campaigns, the heroes of Badajoz, Ciudad Rodrigo, Vitoria, and many bloody combats, and led by many commanders who knew not what it was to fear any obstacle or danger.

They had the best arms, the highest equipment, perfect discipline, an overwhelming naval force. Jackson had a smaller army, of comparatively raw troops, with many unskilled and inexperienced officers, soldiers badly armed, half disciplined, not accustomed to act together, and who received their principal instruction in arms in this very campaign. Among the defenders were released convicts and Lafitte's pirates, only the day before outlawed and proscribed, and other incongruous elements, but all welded together into one resistless mass by the fire of Jackson's patriotism. The city was greatly exposed. There were many points of attack, and it was difficult to anticipate at what point the enemy's blow would be struck. As it was, New Orleans was very nearly surprised. A large British force was landed very near the city before Jackson, with all his vigilance, knew of their coming. His preparations, however, were promptly made, and he attacked them that very night in their works. He swore in his mighty wrath that they should not sleep on the soil of Louisiana, and faithfully did he keep his word. He attacked them incessantly until the day of final assault by Pakenham, when the flower of Britain's chivalry went down before the deadly aim of the riflemen of Tennessee and the hunters of Kentucky. After that overwhelming, crushing repulse the city of New Orleans and the Province of Louisiana were safe.

To appreciate the grandeur of this victory we must remember that it came at the close of a war in which success and defeat had quickly followed the other. On the sea, indeed, our arms were generally victorious. British frigates for the first time almost in history were compelled to strike their colors. Still we had painful reverses, too, on the water. On the land our repeated attempts to invade and overrun Canada had all been repulsed. No impression had been made in that quarter. There had been successes and reverses, and among the latter one shameful capitulation by an American commander. We had, indeed, the glory of Scott and Macomb to console us, but Canada defied our arms and most energetic endeavors. The Indians had cooperated with the enemy and laid waste our exposed northwestern frontier. A British force had landed on the Patuxent River, in Maryland, not many miles from this city of Washington, had marched across the country to Bladensburg, routed the American Army, and then had marched unopposed to our seat of government, burning our Capitol, the President's Mansion, and other public buildings, while the President and his Cabinet had to flee before them.

Treason and disaffection were rearing their front at the Hartford convention, and the war, begun with so much spirit and enthusiasm, was pressing hardly upon our resources as a people. It was at this trying hour that the victory at New Orleans came to gladden the hearts of patriots and to wipe out the disgrace of Hull's surrender and the occupation of our capital by a hostile force. It may be said that a treaty of peace had already been signed before Jackson won his famous victory and that it was therefore unimportant. This would be a shallow view to take of the subject. Suppose Pakenham had defeated Jackson and overrun the Territory of Louisiana, would Great Britain have surrendered it? Our experience of her systematic bad faith in not carrying out our treaty of peace in 1783 and of her gross repudiation of the treaty of Amiens made with Napoleon, and of many breaches of treaty engagements by England and other nations ought to admonish us that if Louisiana had ever been conquered by England its prompt restoration to the United States would have been very doubtful and possibly not effected without prolonged hostilities. But apart from this, I hold that the victory of New Orleans served to develop the national character and by its example to admonish all foreign governments of the exceeding and inherent strength of governments founded on free institutions.

The French revolution was eventually put down, it is true, but it has been a lesson to tyrants ever since. The victory at New Orleans showed that America could defend herself without a great standing army, and that successful invasion was perfectly hopeless. To erect a monument, then, is an appropriate duty. It is not a mere local bounty or compliment, for the whole Mississippi Valley—Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi especially—shared in the glory of the defense. It belongs to the nation as a victory second only to Yorktown in its effect, and with all the glory belonging to our own people, our own soldiers, and the mighty leader of our brave defenders.

I can not more appropriately and more forcibly conclude, Mr. Chairman, than by quoting that magnetic leader of the people, Henry Clay, who said in one of the great efforts which have made his name immortal in the history of our country:

> What do I mean by national glory? Glory such as Hull, Jackson, and Perry have acquired. And are gentlemen insensible to their deeds in animating the country in the hour of peril hereafter?
> Did the battle of Thermopylæ preserve Greece but once?
> While the Mississippi continues to bear the tribute of the Iron Mountains and the Alleghenies to her delta and to the Gulf of Mexico the 8th of January shall be remembered, and the glory of that day shall stimulate future patriots and nerve the arms of unborn freemen in driving the presumptuous invader from our country's soil.

[Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BENNET of New York). If there are no further demands for time, the Clerk will commence reading the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

For contingent expenses of the military information division, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference, professional and technical periodicals and newspapers, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; and of the branch office of the military information division at Manila, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000: Provided, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word.

There was a proposition here the other day, presented by the Committee on Appropriations, forbidding hereafter the purchase of any periodicals except technical and scientific works. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether, in his judgment, it is necessary that the War Department shall have the right to purchase the foreign professional newspapers and periodicals provided for in this bill?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this matter was fully discussed either four or six years ago, I do not remember which, and it was shown that unless we make this provision the officers have to advance the subscription out of their own pockets and put in a bill and have it allowed to them personally. It only applies to the foreign and professional papers.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman, but when I raised the point of order on the proposition the other day, some of the distinguished members of the Committee on Appropriations were inclined to severely criticise me for it, and I wanted to know from the committee that has jurisdiction whether these things are needed.

Mr. HULL. These are technical matters, and thought to be of great value from a military standpoint. It is thought proper that they should have these periodicals.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $200,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in the preparation of the bill there was an agreement on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs that a provision similar to the one carried in the last bill for the extension of the telegraph and cable system should be inserted in the bill, but in the make-up of the bill it was omitted. I therefore move the following amendment, to come in after the word "dollars," in line 10, page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert on page 5, line 10, after the word "dollars:"

"Provided, That of the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $190,000 be, and the same is hereby, made available for defraying the cost of such extension and betterments of the system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, the extent of such extension and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. I believe there was an item of this kind in the last bill.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of that appropriation how much remains unexpended?

Mr. HULL. It is practically all expended and several places are left uncompleted.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language of that provision last year was identically the same as this, was it not?

Mr. HULL. The same as this.

Mr. TAWNEY. And they have made no report of their expenditures in accordance with that provision.

Mr. HULL. I read from the statement of General Allen, in the hearings before the committee:

> General ALLEN. You gave last year $179,000. There is left out of that in the Treasury and not obligated $22,000. It will be obligated before the end of the year. The appropriation came so late that we could not spend all of it this year. The ship is up there now. Out of that will come the amount for our work next summer.
> The total amount received in revenues from the Alaskan cable up to date is $371,827.29. Out of that you have allotted $179,000, leaving the remainder of that fund up to the end of December approximately $192,000.
> The CHAIRMAN. That is the gross amount.
> General ALLEN. Yes; it has all been turned into the Treasury.
> The CHAIRMAN. And the law turned it over to Alaska to extend the cable line.
> General ALLEN. Every dollar has been turned into the Treasury, so that there is still to the credit of the Alaska fund $193,000.

They went over the map, showing where it was desired in one place to complete a cable. There is one place that connects an important starting point with a railroad, and it will benefit that railroad I will say, frankly, to the House; but it will also aid in the development of Alaska. The receipts from the telegraph, when we get this completed, will more than pay a large interest on the investment, giving the Government its business practically for nothing. The commercial receipts from the line will be largely increased, according to the evidence submitted to us, by this addition. I hope that before many years we shall be enabled to dispose of this line, so that the Government may get out of the business of building telegraphs; but, until that time does come, it seems to me that with Alaska situated as it is the Congress of the United States should aid, not only in connecting all the posts of that Territory by cable and land telegraph lines, but that it should aid in the lines that will assist in the development of the Territory itself.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption——

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose that the gentleman has in view. I think this cable system has contributed very much to the development of Alaska in recent years, and I think that if it is extended it will continue to do so, but I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he thinks it is good policy for Congress to appropriate the receipts derived from this service for the extension of the cable instead of paying the money into the Treasury and then appropriating upon estimates, as in other branches of the service? They do not come, like any other branch of the Government service, when they want to extend the line, with a statement of the extensions they intend to make and an estimate of what those extensions will cost, but are given the opportunity here to make the appropriation themselves, limited only by the receipts from the service. This, in my judgment, is not good administration and it should not be permitted. We have no opportunity to inquire into the necessity of the improvement, and second, whether or not their estimate of the cost is a reasonable estimate. In other words, this is a method of making appropriations entirely inconsistent with the policy of Congress in such matters, as the gentleman well knows. It would seem to me better to make a specific appropriation for the extension of the line desired upon estimates submitted by the Department instead of turning over the receipts to be expended without any check whatever.

Mr. HULL. I suppose the check is on the authority of the Secretary of War, where it is expended. They give in the hearings the places largely where it is to be. On page 16 they say it is proposed to extend a line from Fairbanks to Circle City. That would be 175 miles. The rest of it would be largely for betterments. It is important to put the line through Nome to the center of Alaska in first-class condition, and a great deal of money would have to be spent on it.

I fully agree with the general proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota, and I am perfectly willing that a proviso should be added providing that hereafter detailed estimates shall be submitted before any further appropriations shall be made. I am in hopes that this will complete what we have to do.

But this is a specific appropriation for a specific amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. I doubt very much whether it will. The development is so great and the demand for the service is so large that I fear it will be a good many years before it is completed. It is for the purpose of putting this service on identically the same basis with respect to appropriations and estimates, that Congress may inquire of the heads of Departments as to the necessity for the amount asked for.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman thinks it will improve it, I will add a proviso providing that hereafter detailed estimates must be submitted before any appropriation shall be made for the continuance of this service or for further extension of these lines.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, who has visited Alaska and who is familiar with the conditions, if he does not believe that in a comparatively short time the Government will be able to go out of the telegraph business in the Territory? I will say that my information is that it will, and that this is merely a duplication of the experience of other parts of the frontier in the early days, when the Government built for its own use many telegraph lines on the frontier of Texas and permitted their use for commercial purposes, receiving the toll that was charged, and just as soon as it was possible to secure the maintenance of the line—the operation of the line for commercial purposes by private parties, which would serve the purposes of the Government just as well—the Government went out of the business. I was told by Major Richardson that that was the policy they expected to pursue in Alaska. If I did not believe that, I would not be in favor of this amendment and in favor of spending money for the development of these commercial enterprises to be operated by the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. While I have great respect for the opinion of Major Richardson, whom I know personally and who is familiar with conditions in Alaska, I am constrained to believe, however, that it will be many years before any private corporation will be able to take over the Government lines and operate them successfully. I am not objecting to the extension of this line. What I am objecting to is the practice growing up in the House, where appropriation bills originate, of appropriating the receipts of a given service to be expended in the discretion of the men who are at the head of that service without any report or check on it at all. It is in the hope of getting this in line with the same policy that has always obtained of submitting estimates and statements as to the extension desired to be made and then appropriating for that specific purpose so that it can be expended for no other purpose and leave the receipts to go into the Treasury where they belong.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported again. I have added a further proviso to it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that, except that I do not wish to waive the privilege of having made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood by the House that the point of order is still reserved.

Mr. MANN. It is reserved.

Insert after "dollars," page 5, line 10, the following:
"Provided, That of the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $190,000 be, and the same is hereby, made available for defraying the cost of such extensions and betterments of the system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That hereafter detailed estimates shall be submitted to Congress for any further extension of the cable or telegraph lines in the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the point of order with that proviso.

Mr. MANN. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn by the gentleman from Minnesota and renewed by the gentleman from Illinois. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Iowa desires, I will reserve it.

Mr. HULL. I do not desire to have it reserved at all.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HULL. I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is part of a line of work the Government is already on, and it is to carry on the same work the Government has been engaged in in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. How does this proposition differ from the one ruled upon in the last Congress?

Mr. HULL. Not at all, except in the amount of money appropriated. It is a little increase, and in the last proviso requiring for the future detailed estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the ruling when this same proposition was under consideration in the last Congress, the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not thereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine: Provided further, That nothing in this provision shall affect the retired list.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso that it is new legislation, and that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made as against the whole paragraph?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Which proviso?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Both provisos, lines 17 to 20, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $9,000,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At line 23, page 5, add the following:
"Provided, That hereafter recruit and prison companies shall have noncommissioned officers, artificers, and cooks of the numbers and grades allowed by law for companies of infantry."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the only change proposed by that amendment really is to allow the artificer and the cook to the prison company which is now provided by law for other companies. The prison company is stationed at Fort Leavenworth, at the military prison. It does not increase the number of enlisted men, because the artificers and cooks are enlisted men. It increases the compensation of the man who is detailed by $2 a month, and it increases the compensation of the artificer who is detailed to that work by $2 a month. It puts these companies on exactly the same par as other companies in the Army.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEERS.

Two hundred and sixty-nine thousand six hundred and four dollars.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that something must have been left out after the word "engineers" at the top of the page.

Mr. MANN. That refers to the pay of enlisted men.

Mr. PARKER. I think there is some mistake at the top of page 6, some omission of the words "for pay of enlisted men" or something of that sort. I desire to look at the estimates before we get to that. I would ask unanimous consent to return to this place, if necessary, at the top of page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to page 6 for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman does not know. We can not tell exactly how this comes in this shape. It is merely a matter of printing the bill.

Mr. PARKER. No; it is more than that. The previous paragraph is for pay of enlisted men, and instead of those words "the pay of enlisted men of all grades" on the top of page 6 you will find simply the word "engineers," and I think there must be some provision for somebody.

Mr. HULL. The language follows the bill as it has been reported to the House for the last quarter of a century. That has always been the language.

Mr. PARKER. I will ask unanimous consent to return to this until I can see an old bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the paragraph on the top of page 6 be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I would say that the same objection applies to the entire two pages of the bill. There is no object in reserving the one and proposing an amendment there.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That section 169 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 169. That each head of a department or independent bureau or officer of the Army in command at any army headquarters or post or the office of the Chief of Staff is authorized to employ in his department or bureau, or in any branch or division thereof or at such army headquarters or post or in the office of the Chief of Staff, wheresoever located, such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he is aware of the fact that by enacting this provision you repeal the law authorizing the appointment of clerks in all the Executive Departments of the Government here in Washington?

Mr. HULL. I am not aware of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, that is the fact. If the gentleman will turn to section 169 of the statutes—well, the language of this amendment will explain it to you. Section 169 of the Revised Statutes authorizes the appointment of such clerks in the Executive Departments here in Washington for whom Congress may from time to time appropriate.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, you amend section 169 by eliminating the authority for the appointment of any clerks whatever in the Executive Departments here in Washington, making section 169 apply only to the Army, where to-day it applies to all the Executive Departments.

Mr. HULL. That may be so, but we followed the report of the Committee on the Judiciary entirely in the matter, and that committee reported this as only an extension.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the joke is on the Committee on the Judiciary and not on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. I have here the report of the Committee on the Judiciary stating with this change it simply includes divisions, etc., of the Army. I will say very frankly to the gentleman I never read the statute when the matter was before us, and have accepted the report of the Judiciary Committee as correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. Section 169 reads as follows:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Now, your proposed amendment to the section would make it read as follows: "That each head of Department or independent bureau, or officer of the Army in command at any Army headquarters," and eliminating entirely the authority for the appointment of clerks here in the Executive Departments in Washington.

Mr. HULL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that very largely this comes from the amendment reported from the Judiciary Committee. The original bill was that each head of a Department or officer of the Army.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a second?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota thinks this would restrict existing law. I think it would very much extend the existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would extend it if enacted as the committee intended it should be enacted.

Mr. MANN. The existing law provides for each head of a Department. The gentleman from Minnesota thinks it reads each head of a department in the Army; but in addition to that it provides for each independent bureau. The independent bureaus which have nothing to do with the Army ought not to be allowed upon an Army appropriation bill, and if the belief of the gentleman from Minnesota is correct then this ought not to be in the bill; and if, on the other hand, it applies to independent bureaus not connected with the Army it ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think so either.

Mr. HULL. It ought to be in the bill only to the extent of enlarging the existing law to cover simply the divisions and departments of the Army that have always had clerks. Now, I think in the way the committee has reported it it may be subject to the objection of the gentleman from Minnesota. The present law now reads, as I understand it, "each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year." Now, that is the present law.

Mr. MANN. That is the way this reads.

Mr. HULL. What we want to do is to include the Chief of Staff and the divisions and departments of the Army for whom these clerks are provided. It was held by the chairman of the committee last year that there was no law. There have always been departments in the Army, a general commanding the Army, now Chief of Staff; there has always been a military division where we had to have clerks outside of those here in the Department, and in order to prevent clerks who are employed here from being transferred to the field and clerks employed in the field, at Chicago, for instance, outside of the Department, from being transferred to the bureaus and having it so they could always be controlled, some six years ago, possibly eight years ago, when Mr. Moody was on the Committee on Appropriations, we agreed to this provision, that none of them should be assigned to duty in any of the bureaus of the Department, so as to keep them separate.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me to state, I will say that we do not have any independent bureaus in the War Department.

Mr. HULL. No; but we have bureaus under the Department.

Mr. MANN. But this does not say "bureaus;" it says "independent bureaus." An independent bureau is one entirely out of any Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would apply to such an independent organization as the Interstate Commerce Commission, for instance.

Mr. MANN. It would apply to the Bureau of Fisheries if that were not included in the Department of Commerce and Labor, for instance.

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Military Affairs has no desire to enlarge the law except to provide for clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters and divisions.

Mr. MANN. This matter is now pending on a report introduced, and we will soon take that up for consideration.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection on earth——

Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman how he would take it up?

Mr. MANN. It was only the other day that the Judiciary Committee was called on the call of the committees to take up a number of matters, and declined to take up any more.

Mr. PARKER. It is on the Union Calendar, and therefore could not be taken up.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misunderstands the rule. The Committee on the Judiciary occupied the time of the House more than an hour the other day on the call of committees, and voluntarily gave its time, and it was moved at that time to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of bills on the Union Calendar, and they did not do it. That is not our fault. At the next opportunity that comes they can do it, I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is evidently not what we intended. It goes much further than that——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HULL (continuing). And am willing to let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] insists upon the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order and understands that it refers to that part after the word "department," in line 5, down to and including line 19.

Mr. HULL. After the word "department" down to and including the word "year" in line 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Chief of Bureau of Insular Affairs, $5,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph, namely, lines 18 and 19, page 13, for the purpose of asking in reference to it. I really do not know whether it is subject to a point of order or not.

Mr. HULL. It is provided by law that the chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs shall have the pay and allowance of brigadier-general while so serving, and this is simply in pursuance of law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. I desire to inquire how the salary of this officer is carried in this particular bill.

Mr. HULL. Because all the salaries for all the Army officers are carried in this bill. The law provides for the detail of an Army officer for chief of the Bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are other Army officers and some naval officers detailed to positions that are considered civil positions, and their compensation is provided in different bills, and not in the Army or naval bill.

Mr. HULL. I do not know of any officer serving in a bureau in the War Department whose pay is not carried in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The supervisor of the port of New York is a naval officer with the rank of commander, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and his compensation is not carried in the naval bill. It is carried in the sundry civil bill, if I am not mistaken, and if this officer is detailed to perform the duties of a civil office his salary should be carried in the sundry civil bill and not in the military appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. They have had a chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs ever since the Spanish war. His rank was that of colonel until this year. By an independent act of Congress the grade was increased from that of colonel to that of brigadier-general.

Mr. MANN. Is this General Edwards's office?

Mr. HULL. Yes. It is a bureau of the War Department proper, not away from here; in no sense like the case in New York, where a man is serving in another employment entirely outside of the Navy. This is under the direction of the Secretary of War and is a bureau of the War Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this pay in addition to his salary as a brigadier-general?

Mr. HULL. No; it is his full pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is he not paid as a part of the military service?

Mr. HULL. All the appropriations for the staff are separate. When we refer to The Military Secretary we give the amount of pay for his department. When we refer to the Judge-Advocate we give his salary and the salaries of his assistants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, why is it this has not existed before?

Mr. MANN. So that this is really a division of the bureaus and the different officials?

Mr. HULL. That is all. If he had an assistant, we would have to put in the pay for him; but as he is the only officer of this character in here, there is no pay provided for an assistant. If you remember, there was a time in the Record and Pension Division when there was but one man at the head, Captain Ainsworth, first as a captain, then as major, then as colonel, and brigadier-general. When the work was enlarged he had an assistant given him, and the assistant also was carried in the appropriation; and it is so with the Judge-Advocate and all the assistant judge-advocates; they are all carried in this bill as staff corps, separate from the line.

Mr. MANN. If this is the provision for Brigadier-General Edwards, my only regret is that the amount is not larger, as he is one of the men who earns a great deal more than he gets.

Mr. HULL. There is no question about the amount being properly here and no question of its being in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will give me some attention, I will ask him what I tried to before. Why has it been segregated this year in this way when it has not been in other years?

Mr. HULL. It had been segregated heretofore when his pay was that of colonel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that he was paid out of the general appropriation for the pay of the Army. There was no such provision as this in the last year's bill.

Mr. HULL. He was carried as an officer of the line before.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there any reason why he will not or could not be paid as an officer of the line if this appropriation was not made?

Mr. HULL. Yes; because by law we have taken him out of the line and placed him on the list of brigadier-generals in the staff.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the information I desired. Until this year he was paid out of the general appropriation.

Mr. KEIFER. But he will perform this service no longer in the line.

Mr. TAWNEY. He was paid as a line officer.

Mr. KEIFER. He will get more pay under this.

Mr. HULL. This is in lieu of that.

Mr. KEIFER. Therefore he can not be paid as a line officer.

Mr. TAWNEY. His pay comes out of the appropriation for line officers under the military appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if that is true, then there is a crime being committed in the War Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. If it is not so, will the gentleman indicate why?

Mr. HULL. Because we have a law now that provides that the chief of the Insular Bureau may be detailed from the line for a period of four years, unless sooner removed by the President, and while so serving he shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general, and we appropriate his full salary here. Now, if he gets his pay from the line, from his lineal rank, and his pay on this detail as brigadier-general, there is a crime being committed by the War Department, and I do not believe that any such thing is possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the gentleman is supposed to have this information. Will he read the provision of the current law under which the head of this Bureau is now paid?

Mr. HULL. It was passed by the last Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman that information?

Mr. HULL. I do not carry all the provisions of the various acts in my head or keep all the acts in my desk, and if the gentleman challenges this statement I have made as to the law, then I will have to get it in this case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is right there, and I am trying to get the information.

Mr. HULL. The date of the act is all that we have in the estimates. I have quoted almost the entire act and the conditions under which he gets the rank, pay, and allowance of a brigadier-general. It is not necessary to quote the provision in the appropriation bill each time an appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to say to the gentleman that this is the first law that gave that.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand, before the present chief of the Insular Bureau was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general by an act of Congress, he was a colonel.

Mr. HULL. He was not a colonel in the line, but he got the pay of a colonel.

Mr. TAWNEY. Prior to that he received the pay of a colonel?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And performed the duties of chief of the Insular Bureau at that time?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, does the act promoting him to the rank of brigadier-general provide for the payment of his compensation as chief of the Insular Bureau during the fiscal year 1907, or does it provide for his pay as a brigadier-general during the present fiscal year? In other words, how is he being paid now; out of what appropriation?

Mr. HULL. He receives the pay of a brigadier-general now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How—out of what appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Out of what appropriation is he being paid?

Mr. HULL. The law promoting him gives him the right to that pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He may have a claim, but how is he getting his money?

Mr. MANN. I understand it was appropriated for in the general deficiency bill last year. Can the gentleman from New York tell us about that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I can not say about that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can tell the gentleman that it was not in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. I have been told that it was in the general deficiency law of last year.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that the question has never been brought before us, except that here was the law, and we appropriated under it. When he was paid under the other law he was probably paid under the appropriation for the pay of the line.

Mr. TAWNEY. How is he being paid this year?

Mr. HULL. I suppose he is paid out of the line officers' pay.

Mr. KEIFER. When was the act passed which promoted him to the rank of a brigadier-general?

Mr. TAWNEY. In the closing hours of the last session of Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. Then his salary could not have been appropriated for in the last Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. The law promoting him to be a brigadier-general expressly provided that while so serving he should have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general.

Mr. KEIFER. This is the first time we could appropriate for it in the Army appropriation bill, because I am told it was in the last days of the last session that this provision making him a brigadier-general became a law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] said that if he was being paid out of the appropriation for the line, a crime was being committed. Now, what appropriation is he being paid out of?

Mr. HULL. There is this to be said about it, that when the law made the provision, under the paragraph on page 18, any surplus from one fund for the pay of the Army would go to make up any deficiency in any man's pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa specifically stated that if he was now being paid out of the appropriation for the line, a crime was being committed.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; I said that if we made this appropriation and gave him full pay here and then he took his pay on his lineal rank in addition that that would be a crime.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no such claim as that made.

Mr. HULL. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. KEIFER. You said he was getting his pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. Let me answer the gentleman from Iowa, so he will know the question I am asking. I am asking him whether at present the chief of this Bureau is being paid from the general appropriation for the pay of officers?

Mr. HULL. I think there is no question of that, and that he will be until this bill becomes a law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I tried to find out. This provision, then, is put in in pursuance of the law that gives this man the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL. In pursuance of the law creating the office of brigadier-general for the Bureau of which he is chief.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on soldiers' deposits, $100,000, and so much as may be necessary to pay back such deposits.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask for a little information. In reference to soldiers' deposits, what does the Government do with the money that is deposited by the soldiers upon which we pay this interest?

Mr. HULL. The Government uses it as all the funds of the Government are used—in any line they desire.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says use it. We have no use for it.

Mr. HULL. We may have no use for it at all. The object of it, I will say to the gentleman, is that it has long been the settled policy of the Government to induce the saving on the part of the soldiers, and the Government pays the soldiers 4 per cent interest on it, giving that amount of interest even when the Government can borrow money at 2 per cent.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the policy; I believe in it; but in connection with the very wide discussion which is going on and has been going on for some time in reference to postal savings banks, it is proper to consider what the Government now does with the fund that it takes as the savings of these soldiers. It is practically paying interest on money without the use of the money.

Mr. YOUNG rose.

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that that matter was provided for in 1872 by section 1350 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry it was not provided for one hundred years ago. It has been a good thing, and the only regret I have is that you have reduced the appropriation $43,000.

Mr. HULL. No; this is an estimate from year to year, and we have appropriated what the estimate called for.

Mr. MANN. We are paying 4 per cent annually. Last year you appropriated $143,000 to pay this interest, and this year you propose to appropriate only $100,000. What is the trouble with the Army?

Mr. HULL. It does vary up and down. That is a question of estimate by the Department.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman from Illinois must understand that some years soldiers withdraw more money than they do in other years, and, of course, the Government then pays less interest. That is the reason that this amount varies from year to year. This fund forms a part of the fund for the payment of the men. It is so provided by statute, and it is used for that purpose by the Government and a portion of the money appropriated for the pay of the Army.

Mr. MANN. It strikes me that it shows something is wrong about the Army. The fund is decreasing, and it ought to be increasing.

Mr. HULL. It does vary from year to year; it may go up one year and down the next.

Mr. MANN. It ought not to vary any more than the ordinary deposits in a savings bank. There are no such variations in the deposits of savings banks.

Mr. HULL. But in this case you are confronted with the proposition that 3,000 men have gone out and no enlistment to take their places. If you recruit the Army up, you will have more depositors; if the Army goes down, you will have less. It is a matter of computation by those having charge of the estimates, according to the size of the Army, and the amount, as I say, of the deposits will vary from year to year.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the reduction the gentleman spoke of?

Mr. HULL. I think in the artillery branch alone it is nearly 3,000. The conditions that prevail in the country to-day are not such as to largely facilitate the enlistment of men. The employment of labor is so great, men get all the employment that they can possibly ask for at remunerative wages, and that tends to call off the class of men that would otherwise go into the Army. Another reason that affects the artillery is that one term of service makes a large number of expert electricians; not expert in the highest sense, but expert in the common work of electric companies, both for cities and large corporations, and they do not reenlist.

Mr. SCOTT. In that connection I would like to inquire whether this bill makes any provision to correct that evil?

Mr. HULL. No; and under our rules it can not, but I hope within the next ten days to offer a bill which will tend to correct it.

Mr. SCOTT. By increasing the wages or salary of these men whose training makes them expert?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn.

Mr. KAHN. The evidence before the committee shows another reason why the Army is not recruited to its full strength and why there is a constant falling off from the strength of the Army. It is due to the fact that there is no canteen; that, as a matter of fact, many men get temporary leave of absence to go away from the post, and instead of going to a reputable place to drink they go into low brothels, become drunk, and they fail to return to their posts, and become deserters. Now, the evidence before the committee shows that that is a condition, unfortunately, that does prevail in the American Army, and probably if the canteen were restored, there would not be so many desertions from the Army.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Was that evidence unanimous, or was it disputed?

Mr. KAHN. Well, mostly every Army officer who came before the committee who was questioned upon the subject stated that that was the fact.

Mr. SCOTT. Of course it is a matter of opinion, is it not, rather than of fact?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine that it is opinion based upon actual experience.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit another suggestion?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does he not think that the recent deplorable affair at Brownsville might have been avoided if the soldiers had had an opportunity to remain in the barracks and satisfy their desires with a mild beverage instead of being compelled to go outside and drink the poisonous stuff that is being served in these dives?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I will say frankly to the gentleman that I do not know the conditions that prevailed in Brownsville, but I do know the conditions that prevail in San Francisco, which is a large Army post. I know that when the soldiers get a furlough they go to the lowest dives in the city and become drunk, and many of them fail to return to the post. If they had a canteen to go to the chances are 99 in 100 that they would not desert from the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if this is not an entirely new provision?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, we are appropriating annually $2,000,000 for the support of the militia.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that Congress contemplated, when it made this appropriation or increased the appropriation at the last session of Congress from one million to two millions of dollars, that that was to defray all of the expense that the Government should bear in connection with the militia, including the officers and their attendance upon any encampment or school that they might be called upon or given the privilege to attend?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in answer I would say that if that was intended when the extra million was voted it failed. The provision which requires this payment is the so-called "Dick Act," which provided that the Government should pay this class of expense, and it has been heretofore paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies, I think, entirely. This is simply to segregate and make plain how much we appropriate for this purpose. I want to say to the gentleman that when we come to that item of transportation of the Army and its supplies the commitee has incorporated another provision requiring hereafter the estimate for transportation and supplies under one head and detailed estimates for all the other items carried in that large provision. The militia act requires the payment by the General Government of these charges, and when we gave them the additional million of dollars for the militia it only applied to the same lines of expenditures for the militia that the first million stood upon the statute books of the country for years applied to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, if I understand the gentleman, while this provision is new, the service for which the expenditure is made is of long standing?

Mr. HULL. It is of long standing—ever since the passage of the Dick militia bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the payments have heretofore been made out of the item for transportation and supplies?

Mr. HULL. That is my recollection. They have always paid it, and they have in this simply segregated the item here so that Congress may know the amounts they were paying for this education of the militia officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not know but that we were embarking upon a new service.

Mr. HULL. Not at all. It is provided in the Dick bill that this must be paid out of the appropriation for the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Noncommissioned officers and privates, 50 companies, $497,131.20.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question for information. When does this Porto Rican regiment end its career by operation of law?

Mr. HULL. I think with this appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. HULL. My recollection is—I may be mistaken in the year, but I think not—that the extension was made for four years in 1904, and it will expire in 1908. I understand the gentleman is referring to the Porto Rican regiment only and not to the Philippine scouts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; the Porto Rican regiment.

Mr. HULL. Because the Philippine Scouts are permanent law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I know that. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paying the expenses of regiments, battalions, squadrons, and batteries of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such brigade or division encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," $1,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I do not intend to discuss this question at any great length, because the chairman of the committee called attention to it when he was speaking on the bill the other day. I think that it is not necessary to have this appropriation every year. It seems to me that having it once in two years is sufficient and all that ought to be done. Not only does it cost the million dollars provided for in the paragraph, but in addition to that it increases the appropriation for the Army about a million dollars, making in all two millions. Therefore I hope that the committee will strike out the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what theory do you maintain that the appropriation should be made every two years instead of annually? Is it because they are not called out in this service or do not need to be called out?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I do not think they need to be called out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Your theory is the practice they get every two years will be sufficient for military purposes.

Mr. HAY. Amply sufficient.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia will not prevail. Under the present system of maneuvers our first year—namely, last year—was a great success. We had before us the Assistant Secretary of War and he said upon this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Page 22 you have an appropriation for the organized militia troops participating in camps of the Regular Army. Is it intended to have maneuvers this year?

Secretary OLIVER. We hope to put the regular troops under canvas, and if our scheme is carried out we will get the militia to participate.

The CHAIRMAN. Just as you did during the past year?

Secretary OLIVER. Yes, sir. Last year we did that experimentally, just to see how it would work. Apparently it has been a very great success. I have letters from most all the governors of the States in favor of it. We found last year that $700,000 was inadequate, as the States spent $125,000 outside of our appropriation, while twelve States did not take part in the camps.

And he then goes on to say that they hope to keep this camp this year for ten days instead of one week, as last year.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is that the reason for the increase of $300,000 in the proposed appropriation of this year over last year?

Mr. YOUNG. It is because they wish to extend the time and because they wish to give an opportunity to these other twelve States to participate.

Mr. MANN. Then a million dollars would not be sufficient. I suppose next year it will be a million and half.

Mr. YOUNG. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN. If they all participate and you extend the time, why does the gentleman think not?

Mr. YOUNG. I think it will not be necessary. I think a million dollars will be sufficient for years and I do think——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. In just a moment. And I do think that there is no money expended for the benefit of the Army that gives greater and better results than this. It seems to me to be a matter of the utmost folly to try to have an organized militia or national guard and not give them the very best possible opportunity to learn the art of war, and that they can only do by participation to some extent with the regular troops.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to know whether these maneuvers are conducted for the purpose of benefiting the men or the high officers?

Mr. YOUNG. They are conducted for the benefit of the Regular Army and for the militia. Our Army up to this time has been distributed mostly in small posts. There are few opportunities for large bodies of troops, such as a brigade, even to act together and maneuver together, and the purpose of this provision is to get brigades together and with them call in the members of the National Guard to assist them, and train both the men of the Regular Army and the men of the national guard, not the officers, but mostly the men. Of course it is a benefit to both.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One regiment of militia is taken from each State?

Mr. YOUNG. At least that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do they take more than one?

Mr. YOUNG. They have not so far.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many years would it take for the National Guard of the State of New York, for instance, to get the benefit of this instruction?

Mr. YOUNG. We hope in a State like New York to have more than one regiment. We hope to have more than one regiment this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the policy of the Department has made it impossible to take more than one regiment.

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, not the policy of the Department, but the policy of Congress, which only appropriated $700,000 for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have such time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have such time as he desire. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that the very purpose of having this appropriation annually is to take in different regiments every year from the various States, in order that they may all have an opportunity of learning the art of war in time of peace?

Mr. YOUNG. That is precisely so.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Is it contemplated that the States shall make any contribution toward the expense?

Mr. YOUNG. That is as the States may wish. They have in the past contributed something in addition of their own free will.

Mr. MANN. Have they contributed anything of their own funds in addition to the $1,000,000 which Congress contributes to them otherwise?

Mr. YOUNG. Their own funds.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, this money pays the traveling expenses of the State troops to the place of encampment. The expenses of the troops while at the encampment are, as I understand it, borne by the State.

Mr. YOUNG. That is true.

Mr. MANN. They just made an appropriation in here to pay commutation of quarters for the officers. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The proposition has been made in some quarters, and the gentleman is more familiar with it than I am, that instead of having this encampment every year to which one regiment from a State shall be sent, that the Government of the United States shall send a regiment of the Regular Army to the State encampment, where all of the State militia may have a better opportunity of observing the national regiment. What is the comparative value of these two propositions?

Mr. YOUNG. I would say to the gentleman that both of those propositions have merit, and that it is the intention of the War Department now to some extent to send regiments to State encampments. That matter was gone over by Secretary Oliver in his hearings before the committee this year, and it is said that that will be with no additional expense to the Government. The troops will be sent there and paid out of the transportation of the Army.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "no additional expense, of course." I would say there would be "additional expense, of course." It is not possible to send a regiment of the Regular Army to an encampment without expense.

Mr. YOUNG. There will be no more transportation in the aggregate in the Army in doing that than there would be if it was not done.

Mr. MANN. Certainly the gentleman does not claim that sending a regiment of the Regular Army to a State encampment does not mean some expense?

Mr. YOUNG. If they were not sent there, they would be moved somewhere else.

Mr. MANN. Is it the policy of the War Department to keep the regular regiments on the railroads all the time?

Mr. YOUNG. For one reason or another they would have to be moved.

Mr. MANN. They do not have to be moved to this place. It can not be done without expense, and I do not see where the Regular Army authorities get authority, for no purpose connected with the Army, to send a regiment, for instance, from Fort Sheridan, in Illinois, to Springfield, in Illinois, in order to be observed by the State militia.

Mr. YOUNG. Well, the gentleman can study that question at his leisure.

Mr. MANN. No; I am trying to get light from the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG. The "gentleman" is not discussing that question, and I will say that the gentleman from Illinois, in his hours of leisure and with his great studiousness, might devote, perhaps, some of his time, possibly, to that inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am inclined to think that somebody connected with Congress might do it, and if the gentleman who is connected with the Committee on Military Affairs declines to state the question, I suppose it will become necessary for some of the rest of us to do it; but we would like to obtain information from the people who ought to know it.

Mr. YOUNG. Of course the Commander in Chief of the Army has the right to move the Army for any military purpose to any part of the United States, and if it is thought for the benefit of the Army to move a part of it to some point where the National Guard is gathered at the time, unquestionably he has that authority and power, and it might be a wise exercise of his discretion. I believe, however, as I said before, that this provision which we are really discussing is one of the most important in this bill and that it ought to remain in it.

Such I know is the opinion of the officers of the Army; such I know is the opinion of the Secretary of War and his assistant and all those who have studied the question.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HULL. Is the gentleman addressing me?

Mr. MANN. I wanted to ask somebody in connection with the committee in reference to the damages growing out of these encampments. We have a number of bills before the House to pay damages caused by soldiers at these places, as it is claimed. And there have been Army boards to pass on these claims.

Mr. HULL. Is the gentleman asking me that question?

Mr. MANN. I am making the inquiry and endeavoring to get an answer to the question.

Mr. YOUNG. I suppose that is true.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman has asked me, I will take pleasure in answering. Of course every time we have an encampment there will be some damages growing out of it. Two years ago the War Department took the precaution to ascertain the damages immediately, in order that they might adjust it, and in that way there was but little trouble respecting the maneuvers at Manassas, but a great deal of trouble growing out of the maneuvers in Kentucky some years ago, and whatever damages there may be done the Government will be under a moral, if not a legal, obligation to pay. You will always have damages where you have maneuvers. In some cases it will be more and in some less, but this bill is only for the encampment, and the amount appropriated for it is provided in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think, when he knows that these claims for damages are never likely to be paid, that they should pay them in one place and an equally large amount of claims in another should remain unpaid?

Mr. HULL. My impression is that when the Department has taken the precaution at the time of the maneuvers to adjust the damages at once and submit it that they can be paid, and should be, out of the appropriations.

Mr. MANN. There has been no such claim paid by Congress, it seems to me.

Mr. HULL. It has been paid for the maneuvers at Manassas, and most of them in full, out of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. They have been paid out of the appropriation, then. That is what I wanted to find out—why one man got his claim paid out of the appropriation and another had his claim allowed by the War Department, but they said they had no appropriation.

Mr. HULL. In my judgment, that comes from the fact that in the first of the maneuvers too large an amount was expended on other matters. Take the maneuvers they had at Manassas, where they spent a million dollars in one week on a dress parade that was of no benefit to the country; then take the case of the encampment in Kentucky, where they had a large amount of damage. It was paid in the one case out of the allotment. The adjustment was made at the same time, and the settlement was made with the parties, and whenever they have saved enough of the allotment for each camp they have paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MANN. There was a board of officers appointed——

Mr. YOUNG. I yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Michigan has yielded the floor.

Mr. HULL. I ask that I may have ten minutes on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Before the gentleman proceeds I should like to correct one misstatement that he made, not intentionally, of course, that the claims at West Point were all adjusted immediately. There was a board appointed to adjust those claims, and they did adjust them. They scaled them from nearly $30,000 to less than $3,000, and those claims are not paid to this day, though it has been more than three years ago.

Mr. HULL. All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that they should be paid.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think so, and I would be glad if the gentleman would consent that a provision should go into this bill for the payment of the amount that the Secretary recommends.

Mr. HULL. If an amendment is offered to this bill making that provision, I will not make any point of order, although this committee has no jurisdiction over claims. I want to speak a few minutes on the proposition involved in this matter. I think it is well known to all members of the Military Committee and the House that personally I am not in favor of these large maneuvers of the Army every year. I do not believe that the militia gets the benefit from them that it is intended that the militia should have. Take my own State, for instance, where we have two brigades. One regiment, and one only, goes to the encampment. If you could send from the regular force a regiment of infantry, a squadron of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, under command of a brigadier-general of the Regular Army, to my State (and I am using that only as an illustration), to remain there during all the encampments of the militia, continuing for a month's time, every regiment of the militia would have the benefit of this instruction. But that proposition is not before the House at this time. I hope that that will be the policy in the future.

I am not willing to support the motion to strike this out, because if it is stricken out we have nothing to take its place. I believe that the maneuvers last year did great good, especially to the Regular Army, but very little good to the militia, because so small a number of regiments in the different States took any part in them. I do not believe these general rendezvous at four or five places in the United States will ever be available for the militia of the States generally, because the constitution of the militia regiments is such that men can not leave their business for any great length of time. They can not spare the time. Their soldiering is only an incident. The Regular Army, of course, can be concentrated at any time, and the men can remain in camp as long as the Government desires, but members of the militia regiments make their living in private life, and can not afford the time to go to distant parts of the country, even where their expenses are paid; but under the State laws they do go into State encampments every year, and they can have two weeks of actual information, instruction, and drill for each of the brigades, under Regular Army officers, if we take the Regular Army to the States in place of trying to take the States to the Regular Army. I believe this was of enough benefit last year to justify what we then expended. There is nothing better offered for this year. The committee determined that this was better than the ideas that I had on the subject. I hope that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will not press his motion for that reason.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to press the motion that I have made, because I would not have made it if I had not thought it was wise to do so. So far as I have been able to learn, I have not been able to find that these maneuvers have been of much benefit to the National Guard. If this million dollars was spent in the States and in instructing the National Guard of the States I would be much more willing to vote for it. I do not believe that three or four days spent by the National Guard at one of these encampments of the Regular Army can be of much benefit. They are taken there from long distances. They only stay there three days at the outside, I believe the evidence shows, and are then taken back. It is a sort of junketing trip and nothing else. If we want to do something for the benefit of the National Guard, if we want to give them instruction from the regular officers of the United States Army, then let us appropriate money for that purpose, but do not appropriate it for the purpose of carrying troops from one end of the country to the other to participate in three or four days' maneuvers, which at the best do not bring about much benefit. It would be much better spent, as is suggested, in teaching them marksmanship instead of in these maneuvers. The maneuvers held in Virginia three or four years ago, for instance, were a perfect farce. They overran the country. They learned nothing, and it was a sort of dress parade in which the officers had a good time, but which resulted in no benefit whatever to the men. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee will vote for the motion which I have made to strike out this extravagant appropriation, which, in my judgment, would be of no benefit to the National Guard of the country generally.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak upon this subject. I ask for ten minutes.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the gentleman from New Jersey be allowed to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak, because I could not believe that it was earnestly proposed to abolish the system of summer encampments for the militia and the Regular Army together that has been such a grand success of these last years. As to the amount, $1,000,000 is what it costs on an average, counting all expenses, to support a single regiment of 1,000 men, while this million dollars goes to the benefit of the hundred thousand men of the whole National Guard of the whole United States. It also goes to the benefit of the Regular Army, because it brings them where they have never before been put, in actual, earnest, sympathetic touch with the officers and men of the National Guard. That touch between the Regular and Volunteer Army, that sympathy, is something that has been sought for since the beginning of our Government, and only now is beginning to be attained.

The statement that these encampments are dress parades must be founded on some misapprehension. I was at one camp last summer to see how it was conducted. I found there four or five thousand regular troops and the same number of militia. The regular troops stayed for two months, while the militia came for a week at a time, not counting the time occupied in travel. It took nine or ten days to include that. They stayed in camp a whole week, and every day of the week was engrossed with duties that were not of parade. There was not a single dress parade during the whole week that the troops were there from my State. It was fully taken up with marching, camping, putting up their own tents, taking them down, with scouting duty, with sham battles, and with an amount of work that was such that the Regular Army at the end of that time was tired out, though that work was only such as trained soldiers ought to have. Our soldiers ought to avoid the garrison dry rot which has destroyed so many armies, where the officers live in quarters and the men live in the barracks, by bringing them together in actual service, in the actual work and duty of the tented field and in camp where the captain's tent is at the head of every company street. Men in that way get to know their officers and trust in them, and officers learn to know their men.

This work now being done can not be done in any State camp, for, so far as I know, there is no State camp in the United States that affords room for the maneuvers of a brigade, much less for an actual sham battle. That was true of the first camp at West Point, but now we have secured grounds of ample size. At Mount Gretna the ground marched over was 10 miles long and 3 or 4 miles wide, with enough room for ordinary maneuvers. They had large maneuvers at Gettysburg, if they were hard on the men, and they taught our men the value of marching and that it must be able not only to shoot and obey orders, but to get there. At Fort Riley, in Kansas, we have a large reservation, and in other States there are others. What is needed for the training of brigades, when artillery shoots 5 or 6 miles and rifles carry a mile, is ground enough to march the men from place to place to find out the possibilities for cover under which men can get within the range of the modern rifle and the modern gun and to teach the soldiers the whole business of scouting and taking care of themselves in the field. We can give life to an army only by bringing it together in such larger bodies as are used in actual war and by giving that sympathy between the regular forces and the militia which we must have if we ever get into a real war. By these summer maneuvers we give, as far as may be, that training to the citizen soldier upon whom in the end we must rely. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa referred to the damages that were paid in such a way that would leave one to infer that they were damages caused by irresponsible people for which the Government would not necessarily be legally liable. Now, the fact is that at West Point, Ky., the Government Army officers entered into contracts with the people there, whose land was to be used, providing in the contract for payment of the damage not only to the crops, but to all the fences and other things which might be damaged, and providing for the appointment of a board of Army officers. That board of Army officers was appointed. They considered all the claims. The amount of the original claims was $21,635. The Army board allowed $2,837.24. I do not know how much had been appropriated by Congress for this encampment, but although this award was allowed some years ago, not a dollar has been paid, and if it is the policy of the War Department to enter into contracts of this sort on these encampments of the State militia, to go in and damage property, ruin the crops of the people who happen to own the land there, and then content themselves merely with appointing a powerless board and paying no money, we better stop the encampment entirely.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would say that, in my judgment, they ought never to allow the expense or damage to exceed the amount appropriated for the encampment. They evidently have done that in this case, and it now becomes a claim. The Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over claims at all, and I paid no attention to that.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. I am not criticising the judgment of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I reiterate what I said before—that in pursuance of law they hold these encampments, and as a result of encampments the citizen is damaged, through no fault of his own, in property, and it is the duty of the Government to pay the claim, whether it comes before the Committee on Claims or where it may come.

Mr. MANN. We all know what the result of sending a bill to the Committee on Claims is. These amounts are small to begin with. Possibly they might have sustained a claim in the Court of Claims, but if the War Department, when we make an appropriation as is proposed here of a million dollars, proceeds to walk into a man's field and ruin his wheat crop and then say to him, "Oh, you can file a claim, if you want to, against the Government"—if that is to be the policy I think we had better stop the encampments. That was the policy in this case. Congress made an appropriation for this encampment. The encampment was held.

Mr. HULL. I think that was the first encampment.

Mr. MANN. They entered into contracts for the use of the land upon which to hold the encampment, making the agreement to pay the money, and thereupon expended the money for I don't know what—gold or gilt, I suppose—not keeping back enough to pay these claims, not even a sum of less than $3,000.

Mr. HULL. Right there I think the gentleman is referring to the first encampment ever authorized. There has been none of this trouble, I understand, since the first encampment. That is not justifying, however, the fact that any such thing ever happended, but I think that has not happended in the last two encampments.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if, upon his own statement, this is not one of those just claims he described the other day, when we had some of the war claims under consideration, where it is perfectly easy for a creditor of the Government to get a judgment against the United States and then collect his judgment?

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly easy, I may say to my distinguished friend, for a man to get a judgment against the United States Government and collect, but it happens in this case that there are a number of claimants—194, I am informed—having a total amount due them of less than $3,000. It may be the gentleman's idea of justice, but not mine, that those men should be required to sue in the district court of Kentucky. I think that the War Department, to which is given the money to carry on these encampments, ought to pay these bills. These men could collect their claims through the district court of Kentucky, on a certification to the Congress of the United States, but that is a denial of justice for which the Department is responsible.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I only call attention to this fact because I understood the other day that the gentleman was urging most strenuously that Congress ought not to consider these bills where a creditor could resort to a court and get his judgment and collect his judgment as he could against a private citizen. I understood the gentleman from Illinois is advocating that policy on the part of Congress, and while I do not believe in that position——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman understood me correctly. I do not believe it ought to be the policy of Congress to waste time over paying 5-cent claims, but I believe Congress ought to provide by law so that the War Department, when it enters upon duties which involve the payment of these claims and it has money provided for that purpose, will be compelled to use the money for that purpose, and not expend it for anything else, and then put Congress to the trouble of considering these claims. It is an outrage upon those people, for which somebody is to blame and for which we are not to blame.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman fully, and I hope hereafter when we have other claims coming before the House he will look at it in the same way.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I would favor the payment of this as a claim or not. I make no promises on this account, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; you will raise an objection when it comes up.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have not to any bill of the gentleman. I may have that opportunity some time——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the appropriation of a million dollars for the training and support and all that of the militia of the States if it were not coupled with this provision that it is to be expended by the War Department in supporting these joint brigade and division encampments at which the Regular Army and the militia will cooperate. I believe that that is money absolutely thrown away, and I believe it is a great deal worse than that. I have not witnessed a great many of these performances and I hope I may never witness another one. I saw one. One of them was brought into the neighborhood of the town in which I live and located about a mile outside of it. Regular batteries were transported from Fort Sheridan and cavalry from every direction, and infantry of the Regular Army were brought down there into that locality, and then there was brought from various sections of the State militia regiments, and they went through some sort of a performance there for two or three days. Among the rest they had a sham battle, and among the rest they undertook to maneuver on a large scale, as an army would maneuver. Well, I served four years and upward in the Army at a time of active service in war and, with a single exception, I never saw any regiment, brigade, division, battery, or squadron ever maneuver either in camp or in battle upon any of the magnificent plans and details that they undertook to perform down there, and they might just as well had a show and a performance on a slack rope and exhibitions of equestrianship for the benefit of a militia of Ohio as to have the performance they had, so far as benefiting the State troops went. In the first place, it may be useful for the Regular Army. Let them have their encampments and whatever is necessary. I do not propose to dictate, but I say this, the militia of the States is organized for quite another purpose. We all understand that. We are not training soldiers for war purposes in the militia of the States. Ulterior benefit may be found in case of war. If we have a war soon we may get a great deal of benefit out of the young men now in the State guard, but primarily they are organized for purposes of protection of the people of the States, as a posse comitatus, armed to support the civil authorities, and in the meantime, as I have said, the ulterior benefit may come in case of war. But this is my point, to handle these troops in the form of a brigade movement, division movement, sham battles, is absurd, so far as the State militia is concerned. Then there is another thing. I do not know what other people's experience has been, but the experience at the town where I live was such that we never want to see any Regular Army conglomerate performance such as that was ever come near us again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking under a great deal of difficulty, for I am not feeling at all like speaking now, but I had come to this point. I am going to tell you now what happened at that encampment. I never would have said a word about it if it had not been brought out in the records of the country in the affair that is going on in the Senate. There is always an irritation and conflict between these farmers' sons and merchants' clerks and men of the Regular Army in these encampments. Some trouble happened in the town of Athens, and a soldier of the regular battery was arrested for being drunk and disorderly on the street and locked up. Some time during the afternoon a soldier of his battery came up and located him in jail. That night somewhere from fifty to seventy-five members of the battery slipped one by one out of the camp, organized themselves into a small force, marched up into the town, marched up to the jail, and just about the time they were about to attack the jail, probably—as seems likely from the facts—a guard of infantry of the State Guard, commanded by a young man—a sergeant or corporal—named Clark, ordered them to halt, and from ten to seventy-five shots were fired instantly and young Clark fell dead on the street. Three others were wounded, and a citizen was wounded, and the bullets flew in every direction, breaking windows and firing into houses. And, incidentally, this whole force scattered and fled.

I do not care to go further. There never was a man punished for anything connected with it—I mean the shooting of Clark and others. There never was an officer of this battery called on to make a report, so far as appears to the public; there never was any report made by the captain and other commanding officers of that regular battery, and the feeble attempt of the local authorities to punish the men who committed that cold-blooded murder was utterly futile, for reasons that I do not care to go into just at this time under the surrounding circumstances. The young prosecuting attorney, J. M. Foster, esq., did his duty, but, for reasons I will not now state, failed. One man was convicted of an assault with intent to kill, for an assault he had made at a distance from where the murder was committed, and that whole encampment was filled with factions and bitterness and troubles of that character, growing up almost necessarily between the Regular Army soldiers and the men of the Ohio State Guard.

So I may be prejudiced by what I witnessed, the horrors of that occasion, and the utter inability of the State authorities to successfully ascertain who the murderers were. I could go a great deal further and show you a great deal more about this, show how little aid we had, how a great deal of trouble was thrown in our way, show the factional conditions between those regular soldiers, including their officers and including the War Department here, who took up the cudgel in opposition to the authorities, and in opposition to the militia of the State.

They ought not to be put together. There is absolutely nothing in it. And let me summarize why. Drill the Regular Army as much as you please, and maneuver it as much as you please. These long marches and these maneuvers are in no wise incident or beneficial to the militia of a State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Were there any colored soldiers at that encampment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not one.

[Cries of "Vote."]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he will give the committee the benefit of his opinion as to the comparative value of this appropriation for target practice of $1,300,000, and the appropriation of a million of dollars for militia maneuvers?

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I regard the appropriation for target practice as of higher importance than any other appropriation to increase the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there any such relation between the value of those two endeavors as would be indicated by the appropriation of a million and a million three hundred thousand dollars? Is not the target practice of infinitely greater advantage?

Mr. HULL. Oh, I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, why is it that the committee appropriates in that proportion?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible to appropriate for target practice any reasonable amount that would aggregate the sum that must be appropriated for maneuvers. We have now largely increased the appropriation for target ranges, and have furnished an incentive in the Regular Army, especially, for target practice by increasing the pay per month, and the pay has increased to those who have qualified as marksmen, expert marksmen, and sharpshooters. All enlisted men in the Army may so qualify. But I see no way by which we could appropriate the sum of a million dollars for improving marksmanship without distributing it to increase the efficiency in target work by giving to each man, as he won his standing by his skill. It may go over a million or fall far short.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, for myself I look upon this appropriation of a million dollars for encampment of the militia and for maneuvers of the militia as an absolute waste of money. The militia, as a rule, are not the volunteers who in time of war augment the Army. For example, the gentleman from Iowa will remember that nine years ago when his own State was called upon for regiments of volunteers, we had then four what I might call "skeleton" regiments. They aggregated about 400 men to a regiment. They were already officered. When we came to the enlistment of those men, or, rather, the mustering in of those men to the service of the United States, a very large percentage of them were rejected.

Mr. HULL. I think about 15 per cent only were taken.

Mr. HEPBURN. I had thought 30. I have seen a statement somewhere that 70 per cent were rejected. See what a skeleton remained. Yet there was a complete skeleton. It was difficult to fill up those regiments to the maximum, and a long time, the gentleman will remember, was consumed while we were trying to get them, and when the regiments were finally formed and mustered into the service they were new men. They were not the men who might perhaps have participated in these encampments or others. They were a detriment, the small number that constituted this regiment. If the Government had made a call for a complete regiment of volunteers, officers to be appointed with the formation of the regiment, there would have been men interested in securing enlistments; but the officers were already appointed, and there was no incentive of that kind, and on that account, and on that account alone, I say it was a detriment. I do not believe that these maneuvers would be beneficial even if these same men——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to have about five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that he have five minutes more time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the same men that had participated in the encampment had gone into the service, I think that this expenditure would still have been, in large part, a waste. Infinite time is consumed by a regiment in tactical movements. Months and months are expended in that way, and yet there is not a gentleman in the sound of my voice who does not know that on any occasion of real service of a regiment they could not use probably more than half a dozen movements during the course of a battle. A change from column to line and from line to column, an oblique movement, a partial wheel, the deployment into skirmish line—that would cover every movement that would probably be made by a regiment. Half a dozen movements would cover them all; and yet we spent hours and days and weeks and months in tactics and scarcely a moment in preparing men for the real business, namely, to shoot with accuracy.

I was a member of a regiment for over three years. I never saw target practice by that regiment; and yet months were expended in fitting ourselves for dress-parade movements that in actual service never were undertaken.

Gentlemen in the discussion of yesterday and this morning of the battle at New Orleans remind me of an incident I have somewhere read concerning those troops that wrought such havoc upon the British. The men in the front rank, according to this statement, fired three volleys and the men in the rear rank fired two volleys, yet there were results obtained equal to the whole number of these soldiers, showing that a result was secured for each two and a half shots. These men were marksmen. They had had target practice of immense benefit to them. They were efficient. And that is what we want with our Regular Army—to make them efficient. Ten thousand such men as were at the battle of New Orleans, composing Coffee's brigade, are worth more than the whole Regular Army when it comes to the use of the musket. Ten thousand men that could produce such results as these are worth more than 100,000 men that waste cartridges as cartridges are wasted. During the Mexican war we expended 70 cartridges to produce a result, and in those times they used buck and ball cartridges, having nine missiles in each cartridge. At the battle of Murfreesboro 119 cartridges were expended to produce a result. I was told by an officer who was present at the battles around Santiago that, in his judgment, more than 500 cartridges were expended to produce a result. How much more efficient would one-twentieth part of these men have been had they been skilled as were the men that composed the army of Jackson.

Therefore it seems to me that the one expenditure that we ought to be most willing to make and most zealous to have properly used is that for target practice. If you intend to make an army that will be efficient, you can not accomplish much in results by expending this money on the militia, because you have no certainty that the men whom you have thus educated will serve in time of war. But it is not so with the Regular Army. Every man in it ought to be made efficient with his musket. It does not matter, if he is so efficient, whether he can perform the fanciful Fourth of July evolutions or not. You want him capable of performing half a dozen of these movements; but you want him to be able to march and march with celerity. It was the rapidity of movements that was made possible by the drill in marching that made Jackson's army so formidable; their ability to move; their knowledge of logistics; their ability to use that knowledge in actual marches by night or day. It made them efficient. When you have our Army in such a condition that it can march, in such a condition that it can shoot with accuracy, it shows that there has been discipline, and it becomes a terror to its enemies. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], striking out the paragraph.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HAY), there were—ayes 27, noes 50.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For paying claims for damages incident to the Army maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in the year 1903, the sum of $2,837.24, to be immediately available."

Mr. HULL. I reserve the point of order against that. My understanding from the gentleman from Illinois was that the board of Army officers reported about $3,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. They reported the exact amount in this amendment—$2,837.24.

Mr. HULL. I understood the amendment to read $28,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Oh, no; $2,800.

Mr. HULL. Then I will not make the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the gentleman if this matter has not been before the Committee on Claims of this House and reported favorably to the House?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes; a bill for the payment of these claims was introduced by myself in the first session of this Congress, referred to the Committee on Claims, and, I believe, on March 26 last year the Committee on Claims reported the bill for the payment of these claims, and it is now on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER. Is the amount that is included in the amendment the same amount as that reported by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Taken from that report, just exactly the same amount.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to move an amendment, provided that the sum mentioned shall be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. HULL. I want to reduce the appropriation by this amount and keep these claims all paid up out of what we give the militia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will furnish the Clerk with the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the sum of $2,837.24 of the appropriation for the militia herein shall be expended in paying claims for maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in the year 1903.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to reserve a point of order to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late in making his point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to reserve a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like an explanation of the nature of this appropriation. Upon what theory is it that the Government is to be made responsible for damages caused by these encampments of militia? It seems to me this opens up a fertile field for future claims.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's question I want to say that the land upon which the whole of these maneuvers were held was secured by the War Department, through its proper officers, and in the lease they provided that in addition to 5 cents an acre rent for the land they would pay such damages as might be done to the growing crops, fences, and other improvements by the soldiers during the maneuvers, and that these damages should be ascertained by a board of Army officers and reported to the War Department. They were so ascertained by a board of Army officers. The claims filed amounted to about $21,000, but the Army board scaled them down to $2,837.24, and the Secretary of War at every session of Congress since that report was made has recommended the payment of these claims.

Mr. PERKINS. Why was it necessary for the gentleman to go to the Committee on Claims, if this is based upon a contract made with the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. There were 194 claims, ranging from 50 cents to $5 or $6 apiece. The gentleman from New York can well understand that no one claimant could afford to go into the Court of Claims on a sum of that size. It would be ridiculous to think of sending 194 claimants into the Court of Claims on little sums from 50 cents or $1.50, and so on, until the largest one, perhaps not amounting to more than $5 or $6. The Committee on Claims, to whom the bill was referred, reported it unanimously last March.

Mr. PERKINS. How is the money to be paid?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. To the various claimants by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PERKINS. Why was this not a proper item for the Committee on Military Affairs in the beginning?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not know, but I understand that the Committee on Military Affairs, as the chairman has stated on the floor of the House, had no jurisdiction of this subject, and hence the bill was introduced for the payment of these claims, and was referred to the Committee on Claims, of which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] is chairman. That committee, as far back as last March, unanimously reported a bill, and it is now on the Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. Were these damages occasioned by men in the Regular Army or by militia?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Both, as I understand; they were regulars and militia together.

Mr. PERKINS. Damages done by marching over the fields?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. They were all under the command of United States officers.

Mr. MANN. The claims, as shown by the report of Army officers, were not for wanton destruction of property, but were for claims contemplated by the original contract.

Mr. PERKINS. Damages caused by the men marching over the ground?

Mr. MANN. Soldiers marching over the growing fields, and such as that.

Mr. PERKINS. Any claims for the destruction of buildings?

Mr. TAWNEY. No destruction of buildings, but destruction of fences and things of that kind.

Mr. MANN. It was the necessary destruction that would occur in any encampment, and they ought to have been paid out of the original appropriation; but I suppose that was exhausted in the maneuvers without saving any portion of it, as should have been done.

Mr. PERKINS. In view of the statements, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he does not think his amendment should be a little more specific?

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to making it as specific as necessary, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will indicate it.

Mr. OLMSTED. It did not seem to me to state the character of the claims, as I heard it read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the proviso be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. HULL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there be added the words "claims allowed by the board of officers convened by Special Order No. 162, Headquarters Department of the Lakes, September 6, 1903."

Mr. OLMSTED. That covers my objection.

Mr. HULL. I followed the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky and inserted it in the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa will be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, to civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons and nurses, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), to military prisoners at posts: Provided, That hereafter the emergency ration prescribed for use on emergent occasions shall, when issued, be furnished in addition to the regular ration under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; for authorized issues of candles; of toilet articles, barbers', laundry, and tailors' materials; for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and recruits, including applicants for enlistment while held under observation at recruiting stations; of matches for lighting public fires and lights at posts and stations and in the field; of flour used for paste in target practice; of salt and vinegar for public animals; of issues to Indians employed with the Army, without pay, as guides and scouts, and for toilet paper for use by enlisted men at posts, camps, rendezvous, and offices where water-closets are provided with sewer connections, or where the sanitary conditions require its use. For payments: For meals for recruiting parties and recruits, including applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for hot coffee, canned meats, and baked beans for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook their rations; for coffee roasters, for cooking apparatus in the field and when traveling (except on transports), bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto; scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, blank books and forms, printing, advertising, commercial newspapers, use of telephones, office furniture, commissary chests and outfits, and field desks of commissaries; for temporary buildings, cellars, and other means of protecting subsistence supplies (when not provided by the Quartermaster's Department): Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of War may cause to be sold at public sale, in Cuba or the Philippine Islands, under regulations to be prescribed by him, such subsistence stores in good condition, intended for issue or for sales to officers and enlisted men, as may from time to time accumulate at any subsistence depot, military post, or in the field, in excess of amounts required for use and which can not, with economy and advantage, be shipped to other subsistence depots, posts, or places for military use, the proceeds to be immediately available for general disbursement, under the appropriation for subsistence of the Army current at the time of sale for any of the objects contemplated by that appropriation; for extra pay to enlisted men employed on extra duty in the Subsistence Department for periods of not less than ten days, at rates fixed by law; for compensation of civilians employed in the Subsistence Department, and for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; for payment of commutation of rations to the cadets at the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration at the rate of 30 cents per ration; and for the payment of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough; to ordnance sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts; to enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind; to enlisted men selected to to contest for places or prizes in department and Army rifle competition while traveling to and from places of contest; to male and female nurses on leaves of absence; to applicants for enlistment while traveling under orders; for payment of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, and for enlisted men applicants for enlistment held under observation and general prisoners sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration is authorized for enlisted patients in said hospital), to be paid to the surgeon in charge: Provided further, That hereafter officers intrusted with the disbursement of funds for the subsistence of the Army are hereby authorized to keep, at their own risk, in their personal possession for disbursement, such restricted amounts of subsistence funds for facilitating payments of small amounts to public creditors as shall from time to time be authorized by the Secretary of War; for subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; for ice to organizations of enlisted men stationed at such places as the Secretary of War may determine; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; in all, $6,499,984.80, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and accounted for as "Subsistence of the Army," and for that purpose to constitute one fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order to certain new matter contained in this paragraph. I desire to ask at this time whether it is necessary to reserve the point of order against the entire paragraph in order to reach the new provisions?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman can reserve it against any portion of the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are two provisos that I want to reserve points of order against. On page 20, beginning with the word "Provided," on line 18, and continuing over on page 21 to the word "appropriation," line 6; and on page 22, beginning with the word "Provided," on line 8, down to and including the word "war," line 14. These are new provisions, I think, and there is some information I desire of the chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in addition I desire to reserve the point of order for the present to the expression in the paragraph which occurs several times, "applicants for enlistment while held under observation."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman point out where that expression occurs.

Mr. MANN. On line 22, page 19, is one place, "including applicants for enlistment while held under observation." On page 21, line 25, "applicants for enlistment while traveling under orders," and on page 22, lines 3 and 4, "applicants for enlistment while held under observation."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there are several changes here:

Provided, That hereafter the emergency ration prescribed for use on emergence occasions shall, when issued, be furnished in addition to the regular ration under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War—

Mr. MANN. There is no point of order made on that.

Mr. HULL. Then, to the phrase, "including applicants for enlistment while held under observation," I understand the gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Yes. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. Under the previous regulations of the Department a man, for instance, at Des Moines enlisting in the Army was immediately examined and sworn in. That has been changed so that he simply proposes to enlist, passes a preliminary examination, but is not mustered into the service until he goes to a camp of concentration of all recruits, where he is carefully examined by a Regular Army officer. During this period he is held under observation.

Mr. MANN. It used to be the custom, as I understand, to have these applicants examined by the surgeon at the recruiting station.

Mr. HULL. In the locality.

Mr. MANN. And now it is proposed to have the applicant examined by the recruiting officer and then sent to the general concentration camp?

Mr. HULL. He may have an examination by a local doctor, but he is not mustered in, and under the present law there is no way to feed him and pay him.

Mr. MANN. And that is the reason for this?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is perfectly satisfactory, and I will withdraw the point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, I will point out to him what my objection to this paragraph is. It is not so much against the condemnation and sale.

Mr. HULL. This is for sale without condemnation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; this is for sale without condemnation, at a price to be fixed by the commanding officer. The objection I have to this—and I think the gentleman will agree with me that it might lead to very dangerous practices—is that the proceeds derived from the sale of these supplies goes back into the Treasury and is credited to the appropriation for subsistence. It may be that that opens the way for the officer whose duty it is to purchase supplies to purchase more than may be needed at a given post for the purpose of aiding the officers at that post in securing, when these extra supplies are sold, supplies which they need, at a cost very much below what the Government paid, and then turning the money into the Treasury. The officer who is responsible for the administration of the appropriation loses nothing whatever. This money goes right back again to the credit of the appropriation. I would have no objection if the gentleman would accept an amendment, on line 3, page 21, after the words "to be," whereby all after that is stricken out and then substitute the words "paid into the Treasury of the United States." Then there would be no inducement on the part of the officer to buy for sale.

Mr. MANN. That would be reenacting the existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is so, then the thing I am endeavoring to accomplish will be accomplished by striking out all after the words "to be," in line 3, after that proviso. If it is worded so that the proceeds of the sale of these supplies would go back into the Treasury and not go to the credit of the appropriation, then the officer whose duty it is to administer this appropriation would see that there were no extra purchases made, because to that extent his appropriation would be reduced, and I think it would tend to good administration and prevent abuses that might otherwise arise.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the proposition submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs was to give the power to sell under certain conditions goods that had not been condemned at any post. The arguments that have been used by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would be good if we had made it so broad as that. But we restricted it to Cuba and the Philippine Islands only, because to open it up for sale at all the different posts of this country would lead or might lead to very grave abuse.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HULL. The only argument that can be given for it in Cuba and the Philippine Islands is the fact that, for instance, in Cuba we have quite a large army of occupation at the present time. The authorities properly keep a surplus of supplies on hand there. In the event of the army being ordered home the expense of transporting the subsistence supplies back to this country would be very considerable, and yet if you do not allow them to use this money for the purpose of purchasing other supplies in this country they would ship them back for the reason that they must have the rations if the army is kept to the number estimated for when this appropriation is submitted to us.

Mr. TAWNEY. They would have the power, assuming now that they have a larger quantity of relief supplies in Cuba than will be needed during temporary occupation and have a supply on hand when the Army moves back to the United States again—they would have the power, under this authority, under this provision, to sell the surplus, would they not?

Mr. HULL. Yes; if this stays in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, if they were required to put the proceeds from the sale of that surplus stock back into the Treasury, if it depleted their appropriation to any extent so as to make it necessary for them to come in and ask for a deficiency, it would be such a deficiency, an emergency deficiency, as would be entirely legal; and would it not be better to require them to do that than to open the door for them, either in Cuba or the Philippine Islands, to thus attempt to either increase their appropriation or buy more than they really need in order that they may help some fellow out by selling him at a price below cost?

Mr. HULL. I can see no object in buying more than they need to send to Cuba. I can see an object in buying more than they really need if officers were at all dishonest and sending it to the frontier of this country, because the Government ration is worth the same everywhere to the Army. An officer of the Army pays the same in Alaska for supplies furnished by the Commissary Department as he does in New York. In other words, the freight that is added to this is not charged to the Army, but it is sold at the same price in Manila, Chicago, or in Alaska, and properly so, because if the officer had to carry the load of additional transportation it would destroy his ability to live in some parts of Alaska. He is not there on his own motion. He goes where the Government sends him, and he is put on an equality, so far as the expense is concerned and so far as the Government can, with every other man in the service. Now, I do not believe this provision ought to prevail at all as to any posts in the United States proper. I am not anxious for it to prevail anywhere, but yet, as I say it might be, as I illustrated in Cuba it would be, of actual benefit to the Government itself to give them the right to sell surplus stores rather than to retransport them back to this country. If they are condemned, they get the benefit of the condemnation. If they are good, they can not sell them at all. They can move them, though, and the Government pays the freight. They can move them from one end of the country to the other as demanded by the service.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman——

Mr. HULL. Just one minute. If there is danger in the minds of Members of this being abused by officers selling to increase their appropriations it ought not to stay in at all. I do not believe in the danger.

Mr. TAWNEY. My attention was first attracted to this provision because in an examination of several appropriation bills, especially the sundry civil bill, I found that there is a growing tendency in the Departments and bureaus of the Government where they sell anything to have the proceeds of that sale turned back into the Treasury to the credit of their appropriations. They are utilizing official services employed in the production of certain articles which they are selling under the authority of law, and they are always trying to have the proceeds of such sales credited to their appropriations and thus increase their appropriation. To prevent this, I think they should be required to transfer the money to the Treasury of the United States. That would prevent any abuse.

Mr. HULL. My judgment is, if you make that requisition they will ship all stores back in order to avoid a deficiency. That would be my guess, and it is only a guess.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact your appropriation is always a good deal larger than the actual expenditure?

Mr. HULL. No; not on subsistence.

Mr. MANN. How much more did you appropriate last year than was expended?

Mr. HULL. This year has not been entirely used up yet, but the Commissary Department stated that it would be all used up before the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. You aim to make a larger appropriation and usually have done that?

Mr. HULL. There is sometimes a saving by the reduced cost in buying food, and sometimes there is a deficiency on account of the increased cost of food.

Mr. MANN. It has been charged in some of these places, possibly in the Philippines and sometimes in Cuba in the past, that the people enjoyed the benefit of purchasing Government supplies at a great profit to themselves and at considerable loss to the Government.

Mr. HULL. That was true in the Philippine Islands, where all parties connected with the insular government for one or two years had all the privileges of the commissary that were extended to officers of the Army. That has been taken away now, as I understand it, and should have been done, and that privilege never should have been extended.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there might be danger of that sort of thing if an officer can buy supplies, sell them, buy more supplies with the money, sell them, buy more supplies, and conduct a regular retail or wholesale business?

Mr. HULL. That would never happen at public sales. Where these abuses crept in happened at private sale by order of the Department. This is only for public sale, and it seems to me that the danger is exceedingly remote that an officer would order a sale of the commissary stores where the whole world knows what he is doing, and make an abuse of the privilege; but if there is danger of that in the mind of any man I shall not oppose any proposition to strike it out on the point of order, but I think it is a good provision. I think it is an economical one. I think it is a beneficial provision, limited as we have it here, and not open to all the posts of the country, where a citizen may have influence with an officer to get things, but limited to those two tropical countries, one of which we hope to soon vacate and the other where the enlargement and contraction of the army makes sometimes a surplus.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman says, "We all hope we will vacate one soon," he omits to have in mind a gentleman connected with another body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. HULL. Oh, well, I do not pretend to say we will get out.

Mr. MANN. Why not accept the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]?

Mr. HULL. I think you might as well strike it all out as to do that. That is the only reason.

Mr. MANN. That would leave authority to sell the supplies and not bring them home. That is what you want to do?

Mr. HULL. You reduce the appropriation by that amount.

Mr. MANN. They know they can get all the money they want.

Mr. HULL. They know they are always criticised when they bring in a deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. But they know when they manage to bring in something they have saved in that way they get 100 per cent credit on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose the Army in Cuba has some of these stores purchased with the funds of the Cuban Government?

Mr. HULL. Is not that a violent supposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not, because the evidence is that they are buying them now.

Mr. HULL. Then they would not belong to the Army of the United States. They would belong to the Cuban Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do belong to the Army of the United States, although the cost of maintaining troops there is, to some extent at least, paid by the Cuban Government.

Mr. HULL. I am very glad to hear that, because I was of the impression that we were paying all of the bills for the support of the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. In Cuba?

Mr. HULL. That is, of the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. All the expense the Government has incurred in the island of Cuba up to this time, except the expense of transporting the Army to Cuba, has been paid for out of the treasury of Cuba.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman say that all of the subsistence of the Army is paid for there?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Then I can see no sense in this provision at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not all of it is paid so far out of the Cuban treasury.

Mr. HULL. If they are not sending rations and subsistence there, as they report to us, accumulating a surplus, so that if the Army is kept there the subsistence will be there, and if they go away there will be a surplus, this should not be in at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are being paid for to some extent out of the treasury of Cuba. I have a letter in the committee room from the Secretary of War to that effect. He sent a detailed statement of everything paid, and I will send and get it.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that in our hearing the commissary of subsistence stated that they had to keep a surplus of food there, because if they stayed there they would need it, but if they returned they would not, or if the Army were reduced they would not need it; and yet everyone knows we would not tolerate for a moment running so near the margin of daily supplies that it would endanger the feeding of our army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I asked the gentleman the question for the reason that at present from the revenues of the Cuban Government sufficient funds are being diverted to maintain the Army there. I suppose that part of the maintenance of the Army is furnishing subsistence. Now, under this provision whatever stores remain there they could sell.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman is mistaken about subsistence, for this reason: I have never understood it was the intention of the Government to charge the Cuban Government with the cost of the Army, a cost that we would have been compelled to meet even if they had never gone there. For instance, they feed the Army the same rations as they do here. Now, do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to say or the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to say that the Government is now collecting from the Cuban Government the amount expended for subsistence of our Army there from day to day? If the gentleman states that, and can prove it, this appropriation should be cut down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that.

Mr. HULL. And the "Cuban invasion," as some of the people call it, by our troops is really a great economical measure in the care of the Army, if that is the case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be one good excuse, but I am not inquiring into that. The statement was made that the cost of maintaining the Army in Cuba was being met——

Mr. HULL. Does not that refer to extra expense, as that of charging up the extra mileage?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman for information.

Mr. HULL. I have not got it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman for it.

Mr. HULL. You gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations would have more knowledge of that than I.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have a detailed statement from the Secretary of War in regard to it. I have sent to the committee room for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking this in order to be enlightened upon this provision.

Mr. HULL. I say to the gentleman now, and I think he will see it, that we pay the subsistence of the Army and pay proper of the soldiers, and there would be no more reason to charge the Cuban Government with the rations we issue to our soldiers because they are in Cuba than to charge them with the pay proper of the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Have they the same rations issued there as here?

Mr. HULL. We have an alternative ration, costing about the same, that they can vary; but the character of the ration is practically that of the one issued here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would make a difference in the situation.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman in charge of the bill has reached probably the true point, that we are not paying them anything but the additional cost of maintaining the Army in Cuba; that we buy the ration now just as we have always done, and if there is any additional cost on account of transportation or otherwise in maintaining our Army at the camp of Columbia, outside of Habana, then it is paid out of Cuban funds, by order of the Secretary of War by the governor down there. But there has been no information coming to me that the Army officers were paid or the men paid or their rations paid for out of any Cuban funds. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has a letter which will explain it all.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is information before us of a deficiency for extra mileage that is to be paid by the Cuban Government, and extra cost of transportation of the Army and its supplies. There is a large deficiency made for that, as I understand, and mileage, and that is expected to be paid back out of the revenues of the Cuban Government; but the pay of the Army proper, for its clothing, subsistence, medical attendance, and all the expenses going on the same as they would go on in this country we are paying for.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. HULL. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MANN. It was reported around the Capitol here some time ago—and if not true it ought to be denied—that the expenses of sending the American troops to Cuba were borne wholly or in part out of an original emergency appropriation made at the beginning of the Spanish-American war. Can the gentleman tell us whether that is the case or not?

Mr. HULL. We have no report upon that, and no other information than the gentleman has.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is mistaken. The fact is that it was not the emergency appropriation made at the beginning of the Spanish war. There was an appropriation, as I now recall it, about the close of the Spanish-American war, when the Philippine uprising began, of about $3,000,000, and part of this extra expense, I understand, has been paid out of that $3,000,000 appropriation. How Congress could make that appropriation for the Army and how it could be expended in view of the constitutional provision, I do not know, but it was made, and it has been made available for the payment of that expense.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how that money could be used in that way in view of the constitutional prohibition of such a use. The money could not be properly expended by the Government in that way.

Mr. HULL. It did not come from the Committee on Military Affairs, and members of that committee have no information.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticising where the appropriation came from. The appropriation was probably proper to be made, but the Constitution provides that they can not extend over two years.

Mr. HULL. That is not a question with which we have to do; the Comptroller and the courts can pass on that question.

Mr. MANN. If it be a fact that they are paying money for any purpose of that sort, which was not contemplated at the time the appropriation was made, even if they have the right to use the money legally, there would be a question, but in this case clearly they do not have the right to use the money, because Congress can not make an appropriation for military purposes in that way.

Mr. KEIFER. It is doing it all along. We will do it next year. Because we appropriate for fortifications that continue without any limitation to two years.

Mr. MANN. I suppose they can make an appropriation for fortifications, but that is not for the maintenance of the Army.

Mr. KEIFER. It is connected with the Army.

Mr. MANN. While it is connected with the Army, this is directly for the maintenance of the Army, and that it can not do under the Constitution.

Mr. HULL. The whole matter is with the Comptroller of the Treasury and the courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I shall have to insist upon the point of order unless the gentleman accepts the proposed amendment.

Mr. HULL. Then it might just as well go out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. The other part, line 8 to line 14, on page 22, where it is proposed to give to officers intrusted with the disbursement of funds for the subsistence of the Army authority to keep, at their own risk, in their personal possession for disbursement, such restricted amounts——

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning with the word "Provided," in line 8, and extending down to the word "war," in line 14?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands. Now on page 20, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 18——

Mr. TAWNEY. Down to and including the word "appropriation," in line 6, on page 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. What point of order does the Chair sustain?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order striking out those two provisos. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist on his point of order.

Mr. MANN. No; I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

Mr. HULL. There is only one proviso that has been passed upon, which is the one on page 25 of the print which I have.

Mr. TAWNEY. On page 22 of the one which I have.

Mr. HULL. The one beginning—

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of War may cause to be sold at public sale—

That has been sustained.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Now, I understand the other is simply reserved until you know whether you want it or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL. I understood the Chair to sustain that, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota, directed, first, against the words beginning with "Provided," in line 18, page 20, down to and including the word "appropriation," in line 6, page 21; and under the ruling of the Chair that goes out. Also, the Chair has sustained the point of order directed against the words beginning with the word "Provided," in line 8, on page 22, down to and including the word "war," in line 14, on that page. That goes out also under the ruling.

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply reserved the point of order on the last proviso for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question. I have not insisted upon that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to insist.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not insisted on that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then modify his ruling as indicated.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under this paragraph authority is given to officers intrusted with the disbursement of funds for the subsistence of the Army to keep at their own risk, in their personal possession, for disbursement, such restricted amounts of subsistence funds for facilitating payments of small amounts to public creditors as shall, from time to time, be authorized by the Secretary of War. I have no doubt about the convenience of this, but I want to submit to the gentleman from Iowa that the language is so general as to the amount that an officer may have at any one time that it is very likely to be abused, and if the gentleman could find more restricted language——

Mr. HULL. I should like to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that my understanding is that at places where they have no subtreasury officers have that power now. This only extends it to places where they have a subtreasury. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota, and the committee, to the statement of General Sharpe on this subject:

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the provision about keeping funds on hand by officers at their personal risk, what is the practice now?

General SHARPE. Under section 3620 of the Revised Statutes the Secretary of the Treasury can authorize the Secretary of War to grant authority to officers stationed at places remote from a depository to keep at their own risk in their personal possession the subsistence funds required for disbursement, but in places where there is a treasurer or an assistant treasurer this authority can not be granted under the present law. The purpose of this proviso is to enable authority to be given in places where there is a treasurer or an assistant treasurer. If an enlisted man comes to an office after banking hours to be paid commutation of rations, he must be given a check, and that check he will have to cash at a saloon or some other place.

The CHAIRMAN. It gives the Secretary of War the right to make allowances in places where they have a subtreasury?

General SHARPE. Yes, sir. Those officers are under bond. There is no relaxation of the security to the Government. It places additional responsibility on the officer. In the Spanish war troops went through New York from Montauk Point, and it was urgent in that case; the officer had to violate the law or make himself liable to criticism.

If he had refused to pay them, he would have been subject to criticism, and in paying them he violated the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. And while this provision is new it is not establishing any new authority except at the point where there is a subtreasury or a treasury?

Mr. HULL. That is all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 1, page 20, strike out the words "vinegar for public animals."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a total appropriation amounting to $79,000,000 for purposes little understood by most of us. We have to take it upon credit and upon our confidence in the Military Committee. This particular paragraph covers about $6,400,000. It bears some evidence of having been padded in the matter of language for the purpose of enumerating many items, stringing out long paragraphs of many items to justify an enormous total, but no amount is specified for any particular item.

Now, I notice, on page 19, "Matches for lighting public fires." I do not suppose there will ever be a box of matches bought for that particular purpose. I notice several other peculiar features in this paragraph to which I will not call specific attention, but this item of "vinegar for public animals" seems to require explanation. I have offered this amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Military Committee three questions: First, what are public animals? Second, is vinegar a necessary article of diet for public animals? And third, what proportion of the amount of this $6,400,000 is to be expended for the purchase of vinegar for public animals? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is understood to be a distinguished farmer as well as a great lawyer——

Mr. OLMSTED. More farmer than lawyer.

Mr. HULL (continuing). Realizes that in many cases an application of hot vinegar is a good thing for spavin and sprain in horses, and that at some times it is excellent for the scalded back of a horse. Is not that so?

Mr. OLMSTED. I never have tried it.

Mr. HULL. Did the gentleman never ride a horse until his back became scalded?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I am a good rider. I keep my balance and his back does not rub. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Did not the gentleman ever drive a horse fast enough to cause a spavin?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I never drove a spavined horse.

Mr. HULL. I am afraid the gentleman is no sport at all. [Laughter.] I have lost faith in the story that has been circulated around these halls that he is a distinguished agriculturist from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] I should imagine that a very small amount of this appropriation would be expended for vinegar.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman limit the appropriation to a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; $20,000, I should say, would be sufficient, but let us have it in the debate, so that the War Department may have notice that they must not go beyond a certain sum for vinegar.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will modify my amendment by inserting after the word "animals," "Provided not more than $20,000 of this amount shall be used for vinegar for public animals."

Mr. HULL. I am inclined to think that that is not subject to a point of order, as it is a limitation. It might be at a large expense, but of course the gentleman has no hope or desire of getting such a proviso adopted or he would not have offered it.

The question on agreeing to the amendment was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion this afternoon in regard to our expenditures in connection with the occupation or intervention in Cuba, and I desire, for the information of the committee, to have read at the Clerk's desk a letter received from the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman waive that until I have corrected some punctuation in the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, on page 19, line 18, after the word "war," I ask that a semicolon be inserted. In line 20, same page, after the word "material," strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. On page 20, line 3, after the word "scouts," strike out the colon and insert a semicolon.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is that in the interest of economy?

Mr. HULL. That is in the interest of punctuation and to save amendments by the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. On page 21, after the word "department," in line 9, strike out the comma and insert a semicolon.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there have been some questions asked this afternoon concerning our expenditures in Cuba and whether or not any part of that expenditure is being paid out of the treasury of the Cuban Government. During the consideration of the first emergency appropriation bill at this session, which carried an appropriation of, I think, $150,000 for traveling pay of officers in the Army, the subject came up, and the Secretary of War addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a letter completely covering this subject. In view of the discussion this afternoon, I ask unanimous consent that the letter may now be read for the information of the committee and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the letter to which he has just referred may be read and printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 14, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. TAWNEY: The cost to the United States for the unusual expenditures resulting from the sending of the army of pacification to Cuba amounted on November 30, 1906, to $2,012,632.77, distributed as follows.

Quartermaster's Department:
Regular supplies	$103,763.82
Incidental expenses	84,316.79
Barracks and quarters	22,252.61
Army transportation	1,321,361.81
Clothing and camp and garrison equipage	69,204.25
Horses for cavalry, artillery and engineers	32,500.00
Emergency fund	105,625.00
		$1,739,024.28
Pay Department		82,495.89
Signal Corps		66,616.81
Subsistence Department		49,041.56
Medical Department		57,235.15
Engineer Department		17,774.04
Ordnance Department		445.04
Total		2,012,632.77

In addition there will be a continued expense so long as this army remains there, of which an itemized account is being kept. As near as can be estimated, this will be for the remainder of the current fiscal year as follows:

Quartermaster's Department, for the period Nov. 30, 1906, to June 30, 1907:
Transportation of the Army and its supplies	$403,503.98
Horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers	10,000.00
Clothing and camp and garrison equipage	50,600.00
Incidental expenses	293,538.85
		$757,642.83
Pay Department, $45,831.05 per month, or for the period Nov. 30, 1906, to June 30, 1907		320,817.35
Signal Corps, for the period Nov. 30, 1906, to June 30, 1907		58,000.00
Subsistence Department, $23,925.28 per month, or for period Nov. 30, 1906, to June 30, 1907		167,476.96
Medical Department, for the period Nov. 30, 1906, to June 30, 1907		14,000.00
Total		1,317,937.14

So far these expenditures have been made out of the regular appropriations, supplemented in the case of the Quartermaster's, the Signal Corps, and the Engineer Department out of the allotments made to them from the emergency fund of the War Department. Expenditures from such allotments, so far as reported, are as follows:

Quartermaster's Department	$105,625
Signal Corps	50,000
Engineer Department	10,000
Total	165,625

In my current annual report I say:

"An insurrection against the Government of Cuba that arose during the past summer assumed such proportions by September that the President of that Republic requested the intervention of the United States, under the authority derived from the so-called 'Platt amendment;' and in connection with the establishment of a provisional government for Cuba for the purposes of pacification an expeditionary force of regular troops, aggregating 5,396 men, was dispatched to Cuba and is now there, with Brig. Gen. James F. Bell, Chief of Staff, in command.

"During our first military occupation of Cuba, and while the Army was employed in putting down the insurrection in the Philippines, a large part of the expense involved in such use of the United States Army was made a charge against the revenues of Cuba and the Philippines, respectively.

"Among the classes of army expenditures thus paid out of the Cuban and Philippine treasuries were the following:

"Rent of barracks, hospitals, storehouses, quarters for officers and for enlisted men entitled thereto by the regulations of the United States Army; rent of target ranges, pastures, drill grounds, and similar expenditures; repairs for quarters, and material used in such repairs: services, such as scavengers and policing not required to be performed by troops and prisoners; all expenses necessary in the supply of water; such expenditures as are made from the appropriation for transportation of the Army, as repairs of wagons, transportation material, shoeing of horses and mules, maintenance of vessels and crews used by the Quartermaster's Department in Cuba; surveying instruments and books; expenses connected with the establishment and maintenance of detention camps, material used in disinfection, and similar emergency expenditures; maintenance and operation of telephone and telegraph lines used by the Army; and hire of scouts, guides, and interpreters.

"The sending of an expeditionary force to Cuba of course involves a very considerable expenditure for army purposes additional to that which would be necessary if the same force were employed in their ordinary places of duty. An itemized account of such expenditures is being kept by the Department, and it seems just and proper that the increased cost to the United States of sending expeditionary forces to Cuba should be paid out of the funds of the Cuban treasury."

The authority for the use of the revenues of "occupied territory" is found in the familiar principle of international law which is referred to by Hon. Elihu Root, then Secretary of War, in his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, dated May 31, 1902, being House Report No. 2350, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, and just what procedure was taken and expenditure made is explained in the letter from the then Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dated May 29, 1900, which is printed as House Document No. 396, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

While the present provisional administration of the affairs of the Republic of Cuba is not military but civil in its form, it is in effect and law an assumption of the functions of government. As a necessary corollary to its obligations to maintain stability and to preserve life, liberty, and property, there comes the right to administer and expend such portions of the revenues of the occupied territory as may be necessary for those purposes. Under military occupation the governing control is lodged in the President of the United States. Under the former occupation there was a general direction by the President of the United States for the expenditure of such portions of the revenues of Cuba as might be necessary to maintain peace and order, which extended to all necessary instrumentalities to attain the same. By direction of the Secretary of War, under his order, various expenditures were made by the military governor of Cuba for those objects.

The present government of the island is actually exercised by the President, through the provisional governor of the Republic of Cuba, and he has, by his various decretal orders, appropriated various sums for providing shelter and preserving the health of United States forces on duty in Cuba, to wit:

Decree No. 17, October 13, 1906	$50,000
Degree No. 18, October 13, 1906, general disbursement for necessary expenses from general revenue
Decree No. 105, October 31, 1906, for rents, maintenance and repairs of public buildings, supplying water to troops, disposal of sewage, screening quarters, constructing shelter, necessary labor, and general sanitation	50,000
Decree No. 173, November 24, 1906, for above purposes	30,000

The necessary expenditures for the above objects, and for others necessary to the due administration of the provisional government, are contemplated to be made from time to time. The purposes for such expenditures are necessary to carry out the beneficial objects of our intervention, and are doomed to be properly payable from the revenues of Cuba, and not of the Government of the United States.

The only question which arises is whether the revenues of the Government of Cuba are sufficient to pay the ordinary expenses of its government and these military expenses besides. I think it might be well to authorize the President or Secretary of War to receive from the Cuban treasury and deposit in the Treasury of the United States such sums as the President shall determine to be equitable and available from the Cuban revenues, and thus reimburse the Treausry of the United States for the expenditures incurred by the United States in the military occupation of the island.

Very respectfully,

SECRETARY OF WAR.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, U. S., Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts and on transports, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; and nothing in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1908, or any other act, shall hereafter be held or construed so as to deprive officers of the Army, wherever on duty in the military service of the United States, of forage, bedding, shoeing, or shelter for their authorized number of horses, or of any means of transportation or maintenance therefor for which provision is made by the terms of this act; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing Department orders and reports, $5,500,000: Provided, That hereafter fuel may be furnished to commissioned officers on the active list by the Quartermaster's Department, for the actual use of such officers only, at the rate of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, or at an equivalent rate for other kinds of fuel, the amount so furnished to each to be limited to the officer's actual personal necessities as certified to by him: Provided further, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing, unless the same shall be done by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the purchase of material and hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against lines 17 and 18, on page 23.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the first proviso on page 24, commencing on line 17, and also to the proviso, on page 25, to the clause reading "and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PERKINS). Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa some questions.

Mr. HULL. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to reserve his point of order to the fuel proviso?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HULL. What is the point of order of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I raise the point of order to the provision for the "construction and operation of laundries." I desire to know how much of this appropriation it is intended shall be expended to construct new laundries.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would say that on the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that it is impossible for me to give the exact information as to the amount. My understanding is that it is an extension of the work of putting up laundries they have had heretofore at hospitals, and it is a matter of economy at posts to construct them, and that the amounts that would be expended I should imagine would not be very considerable, but would be something.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under consideration last session I called the attention of the committee to the fact that in several items a great number of different matters were included and large lump appropriations made. For instance, this particular paragraph appropriates $5,500,000 for a great number of different items. It is utterly impossible to ascertain either how much is expended for any particular purpose or how much is estimated for that purpose. So far as I am concerned, I said then that I should, as far as I was able, prevent the addition of new language making it possible to do additional things out of such appropriations. These items should have been segregated long ago. The matters should be divided up, so that Members of the House would be able to know just what was being done with the money appropriated.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the different appropriations carry a very large number of items. Congress has never had in detail all the different items specified and the amount to be used for each particular purpose. I doubt if it would be profitable for Congress to have every particular individual item in this large list of materials to be purchased or work to be done estimated for separately and appropriated for separately. I can give the gentleman the only information that I have here in regard to these laundries. I read from the hearings:

> The CHAIRMAN. The next is "For the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions." We have had that laundry business up, and I thought that we authorized you to have laundries.
> General HUMPHREY. No, sir. We are authorized to do laundry work. We have some laundries that were established by the Medical Department for sanitary reasons. I think it very desirable to provide that at such posts as the Secretary of War may decide require laundries the machinery may be purchased and fuel for operation supplied, so that laundry for the enlisted men may be done in the posts. I have mentioned that in my annual report, and believe the reasons given are excellent. They are as follows:
> "There is urgent need at many military posts for laundry facilities for enlisted men. The work could be done much more economically and with greater convenience than under the present system, or want of system, by which enlisted men have to depend upon private establishments outside of the post, thus making a heavy draft upon their meager resources. Established laundries under military control are also desirable for sanitary reasons, as has heretofore been pointed out by the Surgeon-General of the Army. The present method of having enlisted men's laundry work done at all sorts of places outside of military reservations and which are not under sanitary inspection is a constant menace to health, especially in the island possessions.

Those are the reasons for the items. I think it is subject to a point of order, and I hope that point of order will not be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say that I disagree with the gentleman from Iowa that it is not desirable to have the items of these various paragraphs in this bill specially explained. Last session we discovered that $50,000 had been taken out of the fund for the transportation of the Army in order to test coal. We found a great many instances in which the appropriations were being used for purposes never contemplated by Congress in making the appropriations. In the naval appropriation bill specific appropriations are made for laundries for the barracks of the Marine Corps, and in the estimates of last year $280,000 was asked to put up laundries in connection with the different Marine Corps barracks. The extent of the Marine Corps is very insignificant compared with the Army itself, and if it will require $280,000 to build laundries for the Marine Corps I would hesitate very much to permit the Quartermaster-General to have available $5,500,000 to build laundries for the Army. I know something about the way they use these appropriations. If laundries are required at any specific post, they should be estimated for and passed upon both by the gentleman's committee and by the House. This is simply the opening up of an avenue of great expenditures never yet considered by Congress and not known to Members to be contemplated from a casual examination of the provision. The Book of Estimates for last year shows that the smallest amount, as I recollect, asked for equipping a laundry at a Marine Corps barracks was $6,000. This appropriation authorizes the construction of laundries at any barracks or at any military post, either in the United States or in the island possessions. An astounding sum could be expended under this provision for laundries. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa if he knows whether the increase of $500,000 in this appropriation is intended to cover the proposed erection of laundries under this language of the bill?

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that the increase of $500,000 was given because of the increased cost of a great many items here, and we cut what they asked down. The estimate was $6,350,000, and we cut that estimate down from that amount to $5,500,000 not on account of laundries, but on account of the belief that they might get through on that amount and it is a limitation upon what they could have. The increase of $500,000 was not on account of laundries, I will say to the gentleman, and I have no idea the amount expended would be anywhere near $500,000, because the Secretary of War would select the posts where they are needed most and thus know what they would have left out of the appropriation to carry on the regular work. There is nothing that can be bought under this appropriation except what is specifically mentioned in the appropriation. The abuses to which the gentleman referred a while ago, or what he called abuses, as to tests of coal, etc., were all out of the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there was some in this particular item——

Mr. HULL. There has been a large growth during the years of making that appropriation shoulder everything else that was not specifically provided for, and when we come to that we have required separate estimates for them in the future, but I think to go into a separate estimate of every one of the things enumerated in this would be to burden our record with a mass of detail that would not be of any particular benefit to the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, upon that same line of reasoning we might just as well appropriate one lump sum and let them do as they please with it for the Army.

Mr. HULL. I hardly think that would follow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I imagine that what we are here for is to know something about the purposes for which this money is to be expended; the more detailed information we have the more efficiently we can discharge the duty that devolves upon us.

Mr. HULL. I do believe the reason given by the Quartermaster-General is exceedingly strong in favor of it, and we ought to give the enlisted force of the Army the privilege of having their laundry done inside of the grounds by sanitary methods.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman, but I think Congress ought to determine how much should be expended for a laundry and at what particular place it should be expended, just the same as Congress determines just where and how much shall be expended for a hospital, which is of much more importance to the enlisted men.

Mr. HULL. Congress has never done that in regard to barracks and quarters and military posts. We have given a lump sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said hospitals at those places. We have put a limitation so that they can not expend over $20,000 for any one hospital.

Mr. HULL. In the general hospital appropriation they do not go over $20,000; that is under the law. But generally it is a lump sum and expended under the direction of the Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But under this they could expend any amount they pleased for any one laundry. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Iowa to resist the point of order?

Mr. HULL. I do not resist the point of order at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order, which he has reserved?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I do not think there is any question but the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HULL. What is it?

Mr. MANN. On page 24, the first proviso, with reference to the charge which the Government shall make for fuel furnished to the commissioned officers.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that is the same provision, as I remember, that we had last year.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. HULL. And I will say to the gentleman, if the word "hereafter" was in last year, this could go out on the ground that it is reenacted law. I am trying to see what is the case. There has never been a time when the Government has not furnished fuel to officers at a certain fixed price.

Mr. MANN. I understand all of that, but here is a proposition to furnish fuel at a great deal less than cost.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Which means not only the kind that you describe, which is standard oak wood——

Mr. HULL. That has always been the standard.

Mr. MANN. Or hard coal, or soft coal, or anything else the man desires to burn.

Mr. HULL. Each class to be the equivalent of that cord of hard wood.

Mr. MANN. Now, we pay a certain salary to a commissioned officer in the Army.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Thereupon we provide in addition that he shall have so much money for the quarters which he does not get. Then we provide that he shall receive his grocery supplies partly at the expense of the Government. Then we provide that he shall receive his fuel partly at the expense of the Government. Then we provide that he shall have his laundry work done.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; you do not.

Mr. MANN. You just wanted to put in that provision here.

Mr. HULL. These laundries are for the enlisted men—specifically advocated on that line.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman to say that is what they are advocated for, but the provision of the bill not only authorizes the use of these laundries for the benefit of the commissioned men, but for anybody else in the world.

Mr. HULL. No; they all have to pay.

Mr. MANN. Pay what? A fixed charge regardless of the cost. So that I say it is done partly at the expense of the Government.

Mr. HULL. Now, I will read what we passed last year:

Provided, That hereafter fuel may be furnished to commissioned officers on the active list by the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing that it should go out. It is simply reenacting existing law.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing it should go out.

Mr. HULL. It goes out because it stays in.

Mr. MANN. That is a question for the Comptroller to determine.

Mr. HULL. The reason for the Government placing fuel at a fixed price is because officers are compelled to go where they are ordered. The same reason that applies to that applies to the rations that are sold to the officers from the commissary stores. Now, under the old law, before the last appropriation act, all of the officers were allowed exactly the same amount for fuel. A man in Cuba got just the same amount allowed that the man in Alaska could buy, and a man in Alaska could not buy a pound more. That was not fair. A man is sent to Alaska in pursuance of the policy of the Government, and he ought not to be compelled, as he would in some places there, to spend practically all of his salary to keep himself warm during the winter and be at a disadvantage with the man who is in a warmer country. It is to equalize the conditions that this was put in, granting an increased allowance under certain conditions. The officer in a cold country is still at a disadvantage. The Government has never, probably, made its fuel account come out even on what they let the officers have. It has never come out even on its commissary account with what it has supplied. And yet the very nature of the service required this must be equalized or else the man with the most undesirable billet in which to serve as an officer would be ruined by the Government on account of such service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there will be any objection to letting the officers have fuel partly at the expense of the Government, but it will be highly desirable, if it were possible, for Congress to ascertain what is the compensation paid to the officers in the Army and Navy and other officials of the Government. The gentleman in charge of the bill is not able to tell. I do not think there is an Army officer who can tell.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman from Ohio thinks he can. Let us see.

Mr. KEIFER. No; I did not say that. I stated that the Army officers could.

Mr. MANN. They get their privileges, but nobody knows what is the amount of their compensation. They are provided with a salary, a home, then we let them have partly at our expense their groceries, and we let them have partly at our expense their fuel supplies. We have omitted to add part of the expense of the unnecessary and costly uniforms which the Army Regulations require them to purchase. But nobody knows what the compensation amounts to, and what these things that they get amount to.

Mr. HULL. The amount paid for groceries is more than the amount these articles cost the Government, because 10 per cent is added in all cases, and where transportation has not been included it more than pays the cost to the Government.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that groceries or anything else are not purchased by the officer from the Government unless he can purchase them at the same price or lower price than he can from the grocer?

Mr. HULL. Oh, in the great staple articles the Government, with the 10 per cent added to the original cost, can supply them in all thickly settled parts of the country cheaper than the grocer; but it does not entail a loss on the Government in these cases.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must not misunderstand me. I do not say it is wrong to do it, but I am seeking to find out, if anybody can tell me, in the midst of the constant demand for increase now prevailing perhaps all over this country; and I would like to inquire what they now get.

Mr. HULL. Take a captain. He gets $1,800 a year.

Mr. MANN. That is his salary.

Mr. HULL. Now, he gets no allowance for quarters unless he is stationed in a city where the Government does not own quarters.

Mr. MANN. And if it does not, under this bill he gets $36 a month.

Mr. HULL. If he is at a post, he has three rooms allotted to him; where there are no quarters he gets $36 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that I may give this explanation for the benefit of my distinguished friend from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Now, he gets that $1,800; then he gets a 10 per cent increase on that every five years up to 40 per cent increase. So that if he serves twenty years he gets 40 per cent additional pay on account of longevity service. Now, that is called the "longevity" or "bogey" pay, and this can not go beyond the 40 per cent.

Mr. MANN. That is the salary.

Mr. HULL. That is the salary of a captain. Now, he gets the privilege of purchasing such commissary stores as he may desire to purchase from the Government at the cost to the Government, with 10 per cent added.

Mr. MANN. How does anybody know how much that will be, or whether they will buy any?

Mr. HULL. A great many of them do not buy anything.

Mr. MANN. How much does the Government lose in paying out the money in that way?

Mr. HULL. I should say a very trifling sum.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman sufficient knowledge to be able to guess?

Mr. HULL. Nobody could tell, unless they could figure each individual purchase and balance profit and loss.

Mr. MANN. That is what I say.

Mr. HULL. It would be so trifling a sum that the gentleman from Illinois would not consider it.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how the gentleman can say it is a trifling sum. What is a cord of standard oak wood worth in the District of Columbia to-day?

Mr. OLMSTED. Eight dollars.

Mr. HULL. The whole of the time that they are at a post they get fuel allowed up to a certain amount at a certain rate. They now get what they need at such a rate. It may not be wood, but can be the equivalent in heating power of wood.

Mr. MANN. It would cost the Government $8 a cord, and they would get it at three, so that at least part of it would be at the expense of the Government.

Mr. HULL. I will ask the gentleman how much his fuel costs him?

Mr. MANN. It costs a great deal. I can tell the gentleman to provide fuel for my modest house here it costs me from $150 to $250 a year.

Mr. HULL. That is a very high price.

Mr. MANN. I burn a great deal of wood, for which we have to pay out of our own pockets and receive no assistance from the Government.

Mr. HULL. But the gentleman must remember that these officers pay a very large part of it out of their pockets.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. HULL. Why, yes.

Mr. MANN. The Government pays a large part of it.

Mr. HULL. No; it does not pay the larger part.

Mr. MANN. It costs the Government $8 a cord for the wood, and they are only charged three.

Mr. HULL. I think I will undertake to furnish the gentleman with all the wood he wants, if he will take it in considerable quantities, for five dollars and a half a cord.

Mr. MANN. I will take a cord, then, at five dollars and a half. The gentleman is called right now. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. I said "in considerable quantities."

Mr. MANN. Oh, nobody buys these things in considerable quantities. We buy them at retail.

Mr. HULL. The Government buys largely at wholesale. I think I can tell the gentleman within a hundred dollars a year all that a captain of the Army gets out of his pay and allowances.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is wide of the mark more than a thousand dollars a year.

Mr. HULL. That is quite a difference of opinion.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HULL. And while I ordinarily bow with the greatest respect to the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois, I am compelled at this time to doubt his having figured on the question at all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PERKINS). Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 17, on page 24.

Mr. HULL. I concede the point of order, simply on the ground that it is a reenactment of existing law.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what is the reason why the Government should engage in the business of making and selling electric light and power at Army posts?

Mr. HULL. That question was gone into pretty fully last year. It is for the reason that at a great many of these places there are no private electrical plants, there is no ice made, and the people of the locality are favored by the privilege of purchasing it, and it makes no expense to the Government.

Mr. MANN. I was not referring to the provision with reference to ice. I can understand that, but I ask about electric power and light.

Mr. HULL. It is for the same reason, that at many of the Army posts they have electric power, while the villagers have none, and where they can purchase it from the Government it is of great advantage to them, and the amount received for it is covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman thinks this is an advantageous thing.

Mr. HULL. Provided they do not enter into competition with any private concern, and the Quartermaster-General says there has been no controversy raised at any place, but that it has been a great boon to the people living in these places.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The gentleman, as the Chair understands, has a further point of order reserved. The gentleman reserved a point of order on page 25.

Mr. MANN. That is the one I withdraw. The other one, on page 24, is the one I insisted upon, and that was sustained. I withdraw the point of order on page 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Concerning the provision on page 24, a reading of the law of last year shows that this is simply a reenactment of the law as it was last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HULL. It is a reenactment of the present law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For barracks and quarters for troops of the Seacoast Artillery, $1,300,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations for barracks and quarters shall be expended at brigade posts unless by authority of Congress, and no part of this appropriation shall be expended at posts proposed to be abandoned.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to reserve a point of order to that part of the provision in the last section which is new legislation, "that hereafter no part of the appropriations for barracks and quarters shall be expended at brigade posts unless by authority of Congress."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve a point of order on the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CURRIER). The gentleman from Kansas makes a point of order against the entire paragraph, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MILLER. No; against the proviso.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order against the entire paragraph. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HULL. I should like to hear what the gentleman bases his point on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear from the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HULL. Then the Chair and the gentleman from Minnesota have discussed it? I supposed the Chair would want to know what the gentleman from Minnesota based his point on, unless he had discussed it with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair has had no discussion with the gentleman from Minnesota, but it is very apparent to the Chair why the point of order is made.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Chair can well admit that the gentleman from Minnesota has not even suggested the point of order to the Chair until now. The gentleman from Iowa is well aware of the fact that this provision is for the construction of new work. It is a provision that has always been carried in the sundry civil bill. The Committee on Military Affairs therefore had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the paragraph, as evidenced by the provision now carried in the sundry civil bill, which reads as follows:

Military posts: For the construction and enlargement of buildings at such military posts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary; for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with adopted project for seacoast defenses, and for the purchase of suitable building sites for said barracks and quarters, $825,000, of which sum $1,000 may be used under direction of the Secretary of War for examination, survey, and plans for an adequate water supply for Fort William Henry Harrison, in the State of Montana; but no part of the money appropriated for military posts shall be used for the purchase of any land except as herein specially provided.

The matter is new legislation in this provision, and it is not germane to the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard. I have no question in my mind that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over barracks and quarters for the line of the Army, whether at seacoast defenses or otherwise. Even if the Committee on Appropriations has heretofore had this matter, gives it no jurisdiction under the rule. In this appropriation this year there were two appropriations submitted by the estimates; that of itself carries with it no jurisdiction, I am willing to concede, because it is in the estimates, but for the artillery even seacoast defenses is just as much under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs up to the limit that has been heretofore carried in these bills by the two committees as the buildings at any other post in the country. I suppose we have no jurisdiction whatever to say where these posts shall be located, and we claim none on that. The Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction of fortification bills, locate all the fortifications of the country. But giving them the location of fortifications, it does not follow that they buy the clothing; they do not buy the overcoats; they do not buy any of the clothing of the artillery, and they have no more jurisdiction over the barracks and quarters on account of locating the place where the guns shall be emplaced than they have over the overcoats of soldiers.

It seems to me because of this division heretofore we have appropriated for barracks and quarters, and part of the money has been expended at these posts. There has been no restriction upon it; it was simply barracks and quarters. I see no reason why the point of order should be raised against this appropriation simply because in this bill the committee has segregated the items and so appropriate that money for one class of quarters can not be used for another class. If we appropriated in the usual way all could be used at interior posts or all at seacoast defenses. Separating and making specific does not change the matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, one word in reply. It is not that I care anything personally about the jurisdiction between the two committees, but it has always been the policy of Congress, upon the initiation of the Committee on Appropriations, to keep separate and distinct the cost of maintaining the Army and the expense incident to that maintenance and the cost for new construction for new posts. That was the policy of Congress when the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of both the Army appropriation bill and the sundry civil bill. It was for the purpose of enabling Congress to at all times determine from the Army appropriation bill what it was costing the people of the United States to maintain the Army and what it was costing for such new construction or new posts that were not necessarily incident to the maintenance of the Army.

Now, that division was carefully maintained when the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of both bills, and when the jurisdiction over the Army bill was taken from that committee nothing went from the Committee on Appropriations except the items incident to and necessarily involved in the maintenance of the Army. From that time until to-day the Committee on Appropriations have carried in their appropriation bill the provision provided for here.

I think the policy is a good one; I believe it should be maintained. There is no feeling at all on the part of the Committee on Appropriations because of the attempt to take from the Committee on Appropriations this jurisdiction, but it will necessarily result in the abolition of that policy which I believe to be wise and correct—the policy that enables Congress and the country at all times to know what it is costing to maintain the Army and what the new construction is costing the people incident to the existence of the Army. I think there can be no question whatever about the point of order being well taken, because it does not belong to this bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one word in regard to what has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota that the military bill provides only for the actual cost of maintaining the Army. The answer to that is seen in every appropriation bill since the division of power in the House and the taking away from the Committee on Appropriations of certain appropriations. There has not been a single appropriation bill from the Military Committee that has not provided for barracks and quarters, not one. It is true that when the Committee on Appropriations had the entire subject under its control there was carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill the appropriation for buildings costing more than $20,000, and in the Army appropriation bill appropriations for buildings costing less than $20,000. Yet, unless you construe the language in which they make it as waiving the law, they have violated the law every time they have brought in an appropriation for a larger building. The same law that they invoke against the Military Committee applies to them. It is found on page 281 of the military laws of the United States, and it says:

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress and approved by special appropriations for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures the cost of which shall exceed $20,000 shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

Now, we have carried barracks and quarters in the military bill every year since the division of power. We are entitled to that at least. We have jurisdiction of it. If the gentleman were correct that we are only to legislate on the military bill for the actual expenses of supporting the Army, why have we done all these other things that have been in the nature of construction for every year since the Committee on Military Affairs has had jurisdiction?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa if this committee has ever before taken jurisdiction of barracks for seacoast artillery on an appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL. It has never been asked specifically for that. But under our appropriation for barracks and quarters, not limiting it to any other than coast artillery, every dollar we appropriate could have been used there, and much of it has been.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair asked the gentleman from Iowa if the bill under consideration does not provide for barracks and quarters for troops other than seacoast artillery.

Mr. HULL. We divided it for this reason: That the appropriation asked for by the two committees had gone beyond the amount that the evidence showed the Department needed for this purpose. If we had appropriated in the other way, as we have done heretofore, it would have meant that they could use every dollar at the seacoast defenses, or they could use every dollar and let that out. The two appropriations asked for from the two committees exceeded by a million of dollars the amount that the Chief of Artillery stated would be necessary. We wanted to make it specific, so that they could not divert this money they asked for from one purpose to another. That is all. We have simply changed the language of the appropriation to make it specific, that they could not use what they ask for for seacoast barracks and quarters at other posts and what they ask for at other posts at the seacoast. Heretofore they could use every dollar at the seacoast defenses or they could refuse to use a dollar there, as they might desire. It does seem to me that simply making it specific does not change it. The only question that can arise is whether a dollar of this money can be used for any building costing more than $20,000, and, in my judgment, it can not under this provision and under the law I have just read.

If we desire to appropriate more than $20,000 to a building, it would be necessary for us to specify each building, and then the same law would apply to the Committee on Military Affairs that applies to the Committee on Appropriations, and the only difference in the language of the appropriation heretofore is that they call it "for military posts" and we call it "for barracks and quarters." It is identically the same thing, and they put in this language, "subject to the discretion of the Secretary of War," and hold that that waives the law and that he can put all the money in one building if he wants to. I think the intent of the law rigidly carried out by Congress would be that you have got to appropriate on detailed estimates for every building that costs more than $20,000, and you have got to make a specific appropriation for the building under the law.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Iowa has just said, I would like to make this suggestion: It must be apparent that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over this matter; otherwise you would have this anomalous condition. The Military Committee could come in here and make a recommendation for the increase of the Army, and yet they would not be able to furnish quarters for that increase. Therefore I maintain that they have that authority and have always exercised that authority.

Mr. HULL. Let me submit this to the Chairman, just this one proposition. Suppose the Committee on Military Affairs, in place of trying to safeguard this appropriation, had simply said "for barracks and quarters, $6,325,000," as the Department asks. They could have used every dollar of it for what is set out here, submitted in the estimates, not only the $1,300,000, but the whole six million on the coast defenses if they had desired it, because there is no limitation in the language of the estimates and has never been any limitation in former appropriation bills. The Chairman will find on page 37 of the hearings before the Military Committee the matter fully set out for what they desire it. That is the information that enables us to segregate the two items. If we had appropriated as we have heretofore, they could have used $6,000,000 for seacoast defense if they had that number of buildings costing less than $20,000 each.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact there is no estimate made in the estimates submitted under the Army bill for this appropriation?

Mr. HULL. There is an estimate submitted in the estimates for the Army bill for $1,373,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is also a fact that the estimate for this item of barracks and quarters, Seacoast Artillery, is submitted as an estimate in the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Mr. HULL. Just as they do for military posts; and, Mr. Chairman, that is one of the great evils of this class of legislation where two committees have jurisdiction concurrently over the same matters, where if a building costs less than $20,000 they go to one committee and if it costs more than $20,000 it goes to another, making two divisions. They have submitted to the committee in the sundry civil estimate for a certain amount for the same purposes, not only seacoast, but all posts. They claim that those buildings cost more than $20,000. They make this estimate to the Military Committee for $1,373,000 for buildings that could be built and have been built heretofore under the law under the appropriation carried by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the Chairman at the time the point of order was made that he did not care to hear the gentleman from Minnesota was based upon the fact that this paragraph is out of order regardless of the question of jurisdiction. This limitation is not confined to this appropriation, but is general in its terms, "Provided, That hereafter," etc., and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Let me ask the Chairman if he sustains the point of order to the whole paragraph or to the proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. If any part of the paragraph is out of order, the whole paragraph is out of order.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: "For barracks and quarters for troops of the Seacoast Artillery, $1,300,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after line 2, page 31, the following:
"For barracks and quarters for troops of the Seacoast Artillery, $1,300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. And against that the gentleman from Minnesota raises the point of order. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what committee in the past has actually appropriated the money that has built the barracks for the Seacoast Artillery?

Mr. HULL. I should say that the amount over $20,000 in a building had been appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations, and that all costing $20,000 and less by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, has the gentleman any positive knowledge what committee has actually appropriated the money which has gone to build this class of buildings?

Mr. HULL. I have not, but if the Chair will hold the matter up until to-morrow morning I can give positive knowledge one way or the other.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to say in reply to the Chair that the construction of barracks and quarters for the Army out of the appropriations made by the Military Committee have been made out of the general appropriation expended under the statute passed, as I now recollect it, in 1843, and have applied exclusively to barracks and quarters of the Army, not the seacoast defense at all, with a limit on the expenditure to $20,000 for each building. That is the only appropriation that has ever come from the Committee on Military Affairs relating to barracks and quarters. No appropriation has ever been made——

The CHAIRMAN. You are referring to Seacoast Artillery?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not referring to Seacoast Artillery.

The CHAIRMAN. To barracks generally.

Mr. TAWNEY. To barracks of the Army. If there is any appropriation for seacoast defense it has been carried heretofore in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. As a separate item; have you carried it as a separate item or as military posts?

Mr. TAWNEY. Carried it just as we carry it in the current law. It is for military posts, and in the body of the item "For the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense and for the purchase of suitable building sites," etc.

It is under the title "Military posts," but the language of the law especially authorizes the appropriation for the erection of barracks and quarters for the seacoast artillery in connection with adopted projects for seacoast defenses. That is the language of the appropriation for this purpose in the sundry civil bill, and always has been.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and had come to no resolution thereon.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read the first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to reserve all points of order.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DOVENER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Ella F. Sydnor, H. R. 1763, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John F. Starcher, H. R. 10167, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Fannie Hay Maffit, H. R. 3968, Fifty-ninth Congress, and H. R. 7230, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War, an estimate of deficiency appropriation for the War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Long Island channel and Rockaway Inlet, New York—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Newark Bay and Passaic River, New Jersey—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Columbia River and tributaries, Oregon and Washington—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers in the pension case of Mary Murray, with recommendations of relief—to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BIRDSALL, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6855) to amend the act approved August 19, 1890, entitled, "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6055); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 190) extending protection of second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, to certain entrymen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6120); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. CUSHMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5531) for the relief of Francisco Krebs, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6054); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22291) to authorize the reappointment of Harry McL. P. Huse to the active list of the Navy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6056); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15562) providing for the payment of an amount found by the Court of Claims to be due John J. Vincent, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6057); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16793) for the relief of A. Boschke, civil engineer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6058); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19354) granting three months' pay proper to Henry C. Pearson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6059); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20069) for the relief of John D. McLain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6060); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 874, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 680) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Peter Dougherty, accompanied by a report (No. 6064); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 1257, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 681) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of William Offutt, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 6065); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 1258, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 682) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of William Taylor, accompanied by a report (No. 6066); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 1446, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 683) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Lucy M. Fisher, accompanied by a report (No. 6067); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 2167, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 684) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of William W. Callahan, administrator, accompanied by a report (No. 6068); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 2166, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 685) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Salina E. Lauderdale, accompanied by a report (No. 6069); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 1571, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 686) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Joseph White, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 6070); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 2993, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 687) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Mrs. E. W. Williams, accompanied by a report (No. 6071); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 3474, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 688) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of J. B. Chandler and D. B. Cox, accompanied by a report (No. 6072); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 3824, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 689) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Mason Shipman, accompanied by a report (No. 6073); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning immediately after the routine business, I shall call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8631) for the relief of James M. Darling, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7614) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1898, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3357) granting an honorable discharge to James B. Mulford, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7375) to correct the military record of Dennis O'Brien, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19749) to prescribe the duties of deputy collectors of customs, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6987) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Gregg Shoals, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 8th instant, proposing to appropriate $50,000 for compensation and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 8th instant relative to the appointment of three clerks of class 4, one of which shall act as chief clerk in the Bureau of Manufactures, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

LICENSED OFFICERS OF VESSELS.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6898) concerning licensed officers of vessels, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. The committee instructed me to ask that the bill might have present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 4438 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4438. The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, and second and third mates, if in charge of a watch, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels, and the masters of sail vessels of over 700 gross tons, and all other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire. It shall be unlawful to employ any person, or for any person to serve, as a master, chief mate, engineer in charge of a watch, or pilot of any steamer or as master of any sail vessel of over 700 gross tons, or of any other vessel of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire, who is not licensed by the inspectors; and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT ISLES OF SHOALS, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 189) to establish a life-saving station at the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H., to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a very brief bill, I shall ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHTS ON LAKE OF THE WOODS, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 953) for the establishment of lights at the mouths of Warroad and Rainy rivers, Lake of the Woods, Minnesota, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CANNON TO SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two 3-inch wrought-iron muzzle-loading cannon, with their carriages, limbers, and accessories, to the State of South Dakota, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I was requested by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] to ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. FULTON. I ask consent to make a report from the special joint committee appointed under House concurrent resolution No. 35, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws prepared by the Statutory Revision Commission. I wish to state before presenting the report that the committee has prepared one title, and presents it in the form of a bill. I am not advised as to what the proper practice in such case is, but I assume that the bill simply goes to the Calendar. It occurred to me that it would not be proper to refer it, because it comes from the special committee and is based on the report of the Commission. I ask that the bill and report may go to the Calendar and be printed, and at an opportune moment I shall ask to have the bill made the unfinished business in order that it may be taken up and disposed of at the present session. I do not make that request at the present time.

The bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 7678) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Kennedy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the absence of objection.

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas desire a reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as is indicated upon the bill?

Mr. LONG. I think that is the appropriate committee.

Mr. KEAN. I supposed that necessarily it would go to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. LONG. Very well; that reference is satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

HOURS OF LABOR OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit two amendments to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] to the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon. As the amendments are very short, I ask that they may be read and lie on the table.

The amendments were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Amend the amendment proposed by Mr. DOLLIVER as follows:

After the word "hours," on line 8, page 1, insert "except when, by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train of which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal."

Strike out the word "ten," on line 11, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ANKENY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $750 to reimburse John M. Hill, late register of the United States land office at Walla Walla, Wash., for money paid by him, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to pay to Mary Lajord, widow of Thomas Lajord, the salary due him as a messenger on the rolls of the Senate from July 1, 1906, to July 7, 1906, the date of his death, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH NALLY.

Mr. KEAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Elizabeth Nally, widow of Dennis Nally, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expense and all other allowances.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have been detained from the Chamber for a couple of days by reason of an attack of the grippe, and the resolution in regard to the Brownsville matter has gone over twice upon that account. I understand that to-day the bill which deals with the hours of labor of railroad employees has the right of way, and that to-morrow there is unanimous consent to take up and dispose of in some manner the pension bill which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has in charge.

I therefore give notice that I will call up the resolution with regard to the Brownsville tragedy on Saturday at the conclusion of the routine morning business, and submit some remarks on it.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the notice the Senator has given, it is hardly necessary to ask for any agreement as to the resolution to be taken up at that time for consideration, but I want at least to give notice that at that time when it is up for consideration to be discussed by the Senator from South Carolina I shall press it to final consideration and get a vote on it, if possible.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, Senate bill 5133.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, at the close of the consideration of this bill on yesterday the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] asked to have printed in the RECORD a document prepared by Mr. F. C. Rice, of Chicago. This document, which appears in the RECORD to-day, criticises the table prepared by the employees of the Interstate Commerce Commission and incorporated in the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House of Representatives at the last session, which reported favorably a bill relating to the same subject as the bill now before the Senate. That table was prepared and incorporated in the report of the House committee and, near the close of the last session, was used in the discussion upon the floor of the Senate. I know that I made some use of it. I think reference was made to it and quotations were made from it by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

It seems that this Mr. Rice has, or claims to have, examined the files of the offices of the Interstate Commerce Commission containing the reports made by the railroad companies under the statute requiring such companies to make report of accidents occurring on their lines. He claims to have discovered discrepancies, and he even charges that interpolations have been made into those records for the purpose of conveying a wrong impression with respect to the hours the employees involved were at work and with respect to the causes of the accidents as set forth in the reports.

I shall ask leave to print in the RECORD without having it read at this time a reproduction of Mr. Rice's criticism, and in parallel columns quotations taken directly from the sworn reports made by the railroad companies in each case. Each case cited in the Rice pamphlet will be taken up in the order in which it was placed by Mr. Rice.

I do, however, wish to take the time of the Senate very briefly, and I feel that I ought to do it in justice to the Interstate Commerce Commission and those who were charged with the preparation of this report, which was made at the request of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House of Representatives, to call attention particularly to those cases in Mr. Rice's pamphlet in which he charges that interlineations have been made in the reports as furnished by the railway companies to the Interstate Commerce Commission. In Mr. Rice's criticism of the table on case No. 36 he states:

Some one seems to have inserted the words "conductor on duty twenty hours" in the company's report without their knowledge.

This, sir, of course, is a very serious charge. If any employee of the Interstate Commerce Commission has engaged in the business of doctoring these reports in order to advance legislation, he ought to be driven out of the public service.

I have here before me a photographic copy of the record to which Mr. Rice refers. This shows that in addition to the typewritten matter incorporated in the report upon the blank furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the railroad company there has been written the words "conductor employed October, 1896, on duty twenty hours."

These words are written in the handwriting of the railroad official. The identity of this handwriting is proved beyond question by comparison with other reports by the same official, in which there will be no dispute as to authorship. The Commission returned the report to the general manager's office because it had not been made in full compliance with the blank sent to the railroad company, upon which the report should be made, and it was therefore returned with a request calling for a statement of the time which the conductor of this train was employed continuously in service immediately prior to the accident.

In this and every other instance where changes have been made in these reports there is on file, and was at the time Mr. Rice was given access to the reports to make up the table, copies of all the correspondence between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the various railroad companies upon whom calls had been made to complete the records in each of the cases where such records were incomplete.

I will incorporate in the RECORD the complete answer in each of these cases and will only take time to call attention to another in particular. This is among the cases concerning which charges were made by Mr. Rice with respect to the correctness of the record.

I have here a letter from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and accompanying it the correspondence in this particular case, which shows how difficult it is in many of these cases to obtain from the railroad companies a complete statement of all the facts necessary to make a complete record, and which explains exactly how some corrections appear in the records that are on file in the Interstate Commerce Commission office. The letter is addressed to me, and is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 10, 1907.

DEAR SENATOR LA FOLLETTE: Referring to case 81 of the accident report furnished you through Mr. Hannan, this is the only case to which any inaccuracy can be ascribed at all. The facts in this case are as follows:

The accident occurred October 5, 1902. The general manager of that road, under oath as required by the accident law, reported that the conductor "had been on duty two days at time of accident." On January 2, 1903, it was observed that the report had not been made in accordance with our instructions, in that the time on duty was stated in days instead of hours. Accordingly that day a letter was sent to the general manager asking him to please report in hours the length of time the conductor had been on duty. On the 20th of January the general manager advised the Commission that the superintendent had made an error in making his report.

The Commission is compelled to take the sworn statement of the reporting officer of the railroad as to any accident, and it was only after months had elapsed, and then in response to a request to change the report to show hours instead of days, that the general manager gave a different report than the first one.

Whether the report of the general manager under oath or his letter of January 20, 1903, is correct we are unable to say, and it is to be regretted in preparing the report for you the letter was overlooked, it being in different hands than the report.

Very respectfully,

E. A. MOSELEY, Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Then follows the letter of the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission to Mr. Nixon, as follows:

JANUARY 2, 1903.

Mr. W. C. NIXON,
General Manager Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe Railway, Galveston, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your report of collision at Manvel, Tex., October 5, 1902, please report in hours the length of time the conductor had been on duty.

Very respectfully,

——— ———, Secretary.

On January 20, 1903, the general manager replied to the letter of the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission as follows:

GULF, COLORADO AND SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY,
OFFICE OF GENERAL MANAGER,
Galveston, Tex., January 20, 1903.

[Train accidents, October, 1902.]

Mr. EDWARD A. MOSELEY,
Secretary Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of January 2, in regard to the length of time the conductor had been on duty prior to the collision at Manvel, Tex., October 5, 1902.

Beg to advise that after investigating the matter I find that the superintendent of the southern division, through error, showed the conductor as being on duty two days prior to the time of the accident, when, as a matter of fact, he had practically forty-eight hours' rest prior to going on this trip, and was on the road three hours and forty-five minutes at the time of the accident. Conductor Scott arrived Temple October 2, at 1.05 p. m.; was off duty until 2 a. m. of October 4, when he deadheaded to Galveston on a passenger train, arriving at Galveston 1 p. m. of the 5th, and departed on train 36, same date, at 4.15 p. m.

I do not think it is the desire of your Commission, when a conductor is deadheading on a passenger train, that it be shown as length of time in service, even though he was paid for the time while deadheading; for the reason that no service whatever is required of trainmen when deadheading on passenger trains, and they can get practically as much rest while deadheading as they could get at home.

Yours, truly,

W. C. NIXON, General Manager.

That explains, Mr. President, the correction that should be made in that particular case. For the others the statement which I have here, from which I shall quote only a little further, I will ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. While it may be true that in this instance a mistake has occurred in the compilation of the table in the office of the Commission, that mistake is in part, at least, due to a prior mistake on the part of the railroad officials reporting the accident. The other criticisms of Mr. Rice do not appear to be so well founded even as this. In many cases his statements are in direct contradiction to the sworn reports of the railroad officials to the Commission, as will appear from the detailed comparison which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD in this connection. A few cases will illustrate:

In connection with case No. 8, the first one that Mr. Rice selects for criticism, he says: "This man had not been on duty sixteen hours." The railroad official reporting the accident says, under oath, that the employee in question "had been on duty seventeen hours previous to which he had seven hours' rest."

On case 19 Mr. Rice makes the following statement:

> This case should not have been reported. The company's report states: "No one saw the accident;" so that is mere assumption as to the cause of the injury.
> The proposed sixteen-hour law would have had no effect in this case. The accident was the result of a wreck which occurred before the crew had been on duty sixteen hours. The whole trouble was due to a casualty beyond the control of the company.

The company's statement, under oath to the Commission, says of the employee, who not merely sustained an "injury," but was killed: "Prior to accident he worked and rested as follows: Worked fourteen hours and fifty-five minutes, rested eight hours and thirty-five minutes; worked thirty-two hours and rested nine hours thirty-five minutes; worked twenty-two hours and thirty minutes, when killed."

On case No. 29 Mr. Rice says: "The accident really occurred from the failure of the flagman to put down torpedoes, which failure can not be attributed to long-duty hours."

The sworn report of the company states that:

> The accident was the result of the conductor of No. 73, F. B. Poling, and rear brakeman of No. 73, Frank Atwood, being asleep in their caboose and not protecting their train properly. Both of these men were experienced railroaders, having been in the service of this company for three years. They had been on the road, however, thirteen hours and ten minutes on the day previous to the accident, with only four hours' rest before going out on this run, and they had been on the road eighteen hours when the accident occurred.

These examples are fairly indicative of the reliability of the statements of Mr. Rice respecting these accidents, as will appear to anyone examining and comparing his statements with the reports made under oath to the Commission by the railroads. While Mr. Rice takes up in detail only a part of the cases, he declares the whole table to be "a misrepresentation." The fact is that Mr. Rice's statement is discredited quite as much by the cases which he dodged, with the excuse that the companies had not yet reported to him concerning them, as by his garbling and distorting those cases with which he chose to deal. In nearly every one of the omitted cases the company's reports state that the men had been on duty so long that they had actually gone to sleep at their posts of duty. I submit the following brief extracts from the language of the sworn reports of the companies in these cases.

The first part of the table 19 cases are personal-injury cases not connected with any collision or derailment. Of these 19 cases Mr. Rice chose to deal with but 4. I will quote briefly from the exact language of the reports in some of the rest of these cases, giving only that part of the statement which is directly related to this question, being careful to represent fairly the meaning of the report.

No. 1.—Engineer, lying beside track sleeping, struck by No. 18. On duty 21 hours and 31 minutes previous to time of injury.

No. 2.—Flagman sent back to protect rear of train and fell asleep on side of track * * * step of coach in rear of train 311, south bound, struck him in back. * * * Had been on duty continuously 21 hours and 10 minutes. His own carelessness.

No. 3.—He sat down on ties at end of bridge and fell asleep and was struck by passing freight. On duty 20 hours.

No. 4.—Is supposed to have sat or laid down on track and gone to sleep and was run over. * * * He had been on duty 18 hours.

No. 5.—In backing up ran over flagman, who was sitting on the track and had fallen asleep. He was seriously injured and died the same day. This crew had been out about 25 hours when the accident occurred, but the flagman was relieved 4 or 5 hours just prior to the accident, and after taking his place again he had been awake only about 15 or 20 minutes until the accident occurred.

No. 6.—This man was run over while asleep on the track. He was on duty from 7.30 p. m. of the 17th until the afternoon of the following day, i. e., 4.15 p. m., or 20 hours and 45 minutes.

Most of these nineteen cases of personal injury are of this same kind. The employee is kept at his post of duty so long that he becomes utterly exhausted, he falls asleep on the tracks while waiting to flag a train, and is killed. There can scarcely be any question in these cases that the accident is directly due to the excessive hours on duty. The case is not altered a bit by the statement in the report of an accident to an employee who has been on duty twenty-one hours and ten minutes that it was due to "his own carelessness."

Coming now to the second part of the table, the collisions and derailments:

No. 21.—Due to engineman of engine 1068 falling asleep and failing to take signal to stop. * * * Engineman at fault. * * * He had 12 hours' rest; on duty 29 hours.

No. 22.—Accident was directly due to the fact that the engineman on extra west 8909 went to sleep just before the train reached Rendcomb Junction. At the time of accident this man had been on duty 16 hours.

No. 23.—Engineer and brakeman * * * both asleep. * * * Both had been on duty continuously for 18 hours.

No. 24.—Crew on No. 32 went in at Ripley 2.15 for No. 11 and No. 5. They overlooked No. 11, and when it passed thought it was No. 5 and pulled out. Conductor in service six years, two as conductor. Had been on duty 29 hours, with 1½ hours' sleep before going out. Engineer in service seven years as engineman. On duty 29 hours, with 5 hours' rest before going out.

No. 27.—Accident caused by failure of engineer to have train under proper control. * * * Engineer had been on duty 22 hours and 35 minutes. * * *

No. 37.—Due to entire crew, except rear brakeman, being asleep and passing switch at which they should have pulled in. Engineman and front brakeman dismissed; conductor and fireman suspended 30 days. * * * Crew had made Fairmont turn and been on duty 24 hours.

No. 40.—Accident caused by failure of brakeman to properly flag; had been on duty 34 hours. * * *

No. 41.—Brakeman threw switch for engine 773 to back through cross-over from south main track to north main track at a time when eastbound freight train, second section, No. 76, was very close, and engineer on 773 moved back and fouled north main track right in front of them, resulting in collision. Engineer claims he did not see the eastbound freight, but there was nothing to prevent his seeing them if he had looked. * * * Entire crew of engine 773 had been on continuous duty 20 hours.

No. 49.—The entire crew of extra No. 667 are at fault for this accident. * * * The engineman had been on duty fourteen hours at the time of the accident. * * * The conductor and the rest of the crew had been on duty almost continuously for seventeen hours. * * *

No. 53.—Due to flagman and conductor being asleep in cabin and not giving their train protection. Crew had been out eighteen hours up to the time of the accident.

No. 57.—The brakeman of third 74 threw main-track switch without instructions and without knowing what other trains they were to meet, and then sat down near switch and fell asleep. * * * Brakeman in question * * * had been on duty eighteen hours. * * *

No. 66.—Brakeman on second 131 did not have flag out far enough. * * * Had been on duty seventeen hours and twenty-five minutes.

No. 70.—Engineer of train 90 was responsible for this head-end collision, for pulling down main track instead of taking siding as ordered. * * * He had been on duty twenty-one hours at the time of the accident. * * *

No. 71.—Accident caused by failure of engineman of extra 1848 to have his train under control. * * * Crew of extra 1848 had been on duty twenty-six hours.

No. 72.—Engineman in charge of engine 1617 is responsible for this accident. * * * He failed to have his train under control. * * * He had been on duty 18 hours at the time of the accident. * * *

No. 76.—Concurrent negligence on the part of two brakemen. * * * One on duty 23 hours at time of accident, * * * the other on duty 11 hours at time of accident. * * *

No. 78.—Extra 1291 north stopped at Bamford and conductor and flagman were in the caboose asleep, the train therefore having no protection, and extra 3188 collided with rear end. * * * This crew was out about 21 hours. * * * The flagman asked the conductor to be relieved when out 14 hours, but he did not grant the request.

No. 84.—Parties at fault on the road 24 hours and 20 minutes. Had one intermission of 4 hours and 3 minutes; another 2 hours and 10 minutes.

No. 85.—Investigation and coroner's inquest show that Conductor Turner of train No. 81 was responsible for accident. * * * Crew had been on duty 25 hours and 30 minutes at time of accident.

The following statement shows in detail, in parallel columns, the statements made by Mr. Rice concerning these accidents for the purpose of creating sentiment adverse to this legislation side by side with the sworn statements of the companies made in the regular course under provisions of law to the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Accident reports as they appear in the Rice pamphlet and as they appear in sworn statements made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by railway managers.

CASE NO. 8.

STATEMENT CONCERNING ACCIDENT AS IT APPEARS IN THE RICE PAMPHLET.

Statement of cause: "Fell asleep while sitting on track; struck by train. Hours on duty, 17."

The facts: The language of the company's report to the Commission was: "It is supposed that he fell asleep while sitting on the track." This man had not been on duty 16 hours. He started at 5.05 a. m., arriving at Conway yard at 12.56, a run of less than 8 hours, and then laid at Conway yard 3 hours 4 minutes. He met with the accident at 8.55 p. m., or after 4 hours 55 minutes of service. It was impossible to make the crew take 10 hours' rest at Conway yard. They would very much oppose it; there were no facilities there, and the crew would very much prefer to make the return trip and rest at home.

SWORN STATEMENT CONCERNING ACCIDENT MADE TO THE COMMISSION BY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Northwest System, at or near East Liverpool, July 24, 1903; time, dark. J. A. Reig, age 26, killed. This man got off his train, which had pulled on a siding, and sat down on the main track, and was run over by train No. 2d 376. It is supposed he fell asleep while sitting on the track. He had been in the service seven days, and had been on duty 17 hours, previous to which he had 7 hours' rest. The accident did not occur in yard limits.

CASE NO. 9.

Statement of cause of accident: "Sat on track; went to sleep; struck by train. Hours on duty, 23."

The facts: Weaver, the brakeman, had made the going-out trip from Springfield to Newberg in 6 hours 35 minutes. He had 1 hour and 30 minutes for rest; his train was called for 5 p. m., he expecting to make the return trip in about 6 hours. He was delayed 2 hours, switching, at Newburg; 3 hours at Lebanon, meeting passenger trains. He was thus on duty continuously from 5 p. m. until arrival at Marshfield at 7.38 the next morning, where he was injured, 14 hours 38 minutes. At the time he was called for the return trip he had only been on duty 6 hours 35 minutes, and could then have had additional rest if he had asked for it.

Before starting he had had more than 19 hours' rest.

At or near Marshfield, Mo., July 31, 1903; time, 8.15 a. m. C. C. Weaver, brakeman, age about 28 years, fatally injured. Was with extra 757–951, and when about 1 mile east of Marshfield pulled drawhead out of car, and brakeman Weaver was sent back to flag. Went back about ¾ mile, sat down on track and went to sleep, and was struck and fatally injured by X 795 West. Died 3.10 p. m. August 1, 1903. On duty 23 hours 45 minutes after having had rest for previous 19 hours and 15 minutes.

CASE NO. 10.

Statement of cause of accident: "Engineman dropped crown sheet, blowing out grates, ash pans, and connections. Hours on duty, 23."

The facts: The company's report shows that in a snowshed the engine dropped crown sheet; the fireman was in the act of putting coal in the fire box when the accident occurred. The fireman had been on duty 11 hours 25 minutes. The engineer had been on duty 11 hours 25 minutes. The only member of the crew who is claimed to have been on duty 23 hours was the brakeman, who had nothing whatever to do with the accident. No member of the crew who had anything to do with the accident had been on duty longer than 11 hours 25 minutes, with 15 hours' previous rest. The cause of the accident was remote from any question of hours on duty.

At or near Alvin, Wash., August 14, 1904; time, dark. J. C. Davis, engineer, age 39, in service of this company since 1897, no previous experience, injured. O. F. Strand, student fireman, age 24 (Spokane Div. emp.), injured. C. H. Cracraft, brakeman, age 35, in service of this company since May, 1901, previous experience, 15 years, injured. Extra 1108, engineer, J. C. Davis; in snowshed 3¼; engine dropped crown sheet, blowing out grates, ash pan, and connections, scalding face, neck, legs of engineer. Fireman was in act of putting coal in fire box when explosion occurred, scalding him over entire person, including face, trunk, and limbs. Brakeman Cracraft had hands and face scalded. J. C. Davis on duty 11 hours 25 minutes; rest, 15 hours 40 minutes. C. H. Cracraft on duty same period; 23 hours 45 minutes rest. Fireman on duty 11 hours 25 minutes. First trip. Equipment O. K.; carelessness on part of engineer.

CASE NO. 19.

Statement of cause: "Out flagging; went to sleep on track. Hours on duty, blank."

The facts: This case should not have been reported. The company's report states: "No one saw the accident;" so that it is mere assumption as to the cause of the injury.

The proposed sixteen-hour law would have had no effect in this case; the accident was the result of a wreck, which occurred before the crew had been on duty 16 hours. The whole trouble was due to a casualty beyond the control of the company.

At or near East Germantown, Ind., March 16, 1903; time, dark. H. H. McDonal, aged 23, brakeman, in service 3 months, killed. While he was out flagging for a work train he was run over by train No. 2 and killed instantly. No one saw the accident, but No. 2 was only train that passed from time he went out until he was found dead. Prior to accident he worked and rested as follows: Worked 14 hours and 55 minutes; rested 8 hours and 35 minutes; worked 32 hours and rested 9 hours and 25 minutes; worked 22 hours and 30 minutes when killed.

CASE NO. 20.

Statement of cause: "Crew falling asleep. Hours on duty, 27."

The facts: The statement made by the company to the Commission was as follows: "Had been on duty 27 hours, with four hours intervening sleep, behind a landslide."

Additional facts regarding this crew are given as follows: "It was a round trip, and the crew was on duty 11 hours 55 minutes, eastbound, and spent four hours of this time behind a landslide. At the terminal they had 3 hours 42 minutes further rest before making the westbound run, which occupied 10 hours 23 minutes. They made no request for further rest. Their longest continuous duty was 11 hours 55 minutes, eastbound, of which 4 hours was behind a landslide."

At or near Porters Falls, W. Va., October 20, 1905; time, dark; estimated damages, $2,000. One brakeman, age 27, collar bone broken; one brakeman, age 30, ankle sprained. Extra freight train engine No. 275, northbound, collided with rear of extra 231, northbound, destroying caboose and two cars, damaging engine 275 and eight cars. Caused by engine crew on engine 275 falling asleep. Had been on duty 27 hours, with 4 hours intervening sleep, behind a landslide.

CASE NO. 25.

Statement of cause: "Running down grade too fast. Hours on duty, 18."

The facts: Collision was due entirely to the manner in which the engineer handled his train of 33 freight cars. He was running down grade at a high rate of speed and did not begin to hold up in time to pass through the station under proper control; when he found the semaphore set against him he could not get the train stopped in time to avoid collision. No claim made that hours on duty had anything to do with the excessive speed of train.

At Arenzville, Ill., January 7, 1905; time, 6.15 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $3,050. Brakeman, age 21, shoulder bruised; jumped from engine in collision. Northbound extra freight train, consisting of engine and 33 loaded cars (1,426 tons), the engine and 16 cars equipped with air brakes in working order, pulled into station at too high a rate of speed and collided with rear of freight train No. 91 standing at station, badly damaging engine and two loaded cars in the extra and 13 cars in train No. 91. Engineer at fault for running down grade too fast. Eight hand brakes were set, besides the air-brake cars. Engineer in service twelve years; on duty 18 hours, after 13 hours' rest.

CASE NO. 26.

Statement of cause: "Running at high rate of speed. Hours on duty, 18¼."

The facts: The length of time on duty had no bearing on this accident. The company's report states: "The responsibility for the accident rests with the engineer of extra 203. It appears that he turned over the hill approaching Guthrie at too high rate of speed and did not start to apply air brakes at the proper time. He also wasted the air pressure by making too light applications, so that when he found that he was not going to stop before reaching the crossing, and attempted to make an emergency application, he was unable to get the proper effect from the brakes."

At or near Guthrie, Ky., January 13; time, 3.35 a. m.; estimated damage, $1,036. Injured, R. G. Graves, fireman, 22 years, contusion of hip and chest. Henderson division freight train, first No. 67, south, was pulling slowly over crossing of Memphis line division. Memphis line freight train, extra No. 203, north, consisting of 12 loaded cars, 10 with air brakes in service, collided with side of Henderson division train, the engine running completely through it. Engine was considerably damaged and body of one gondola destroyed and two other cars slightly damaged. The fireman of engine 203 attempted to jump and was caught betwen cab and tender. The responsibility for the accident rests with the engineer of extra 203. It appears that he turned over the hill approaching Guthrie at too high rate of speed and did not start to apply air brakes at the proper time. He also wasted the air pressure by making two light applications, so that when he found that he was not going to stop before reaching the crossing, and attempted to make an emergency application, he was unable to get the proper effect from the brakes. He also failed to call for hand brakes when he found that the air brakes were not properly checking the speed of the train. The air brakes on the 10 cars were in good working order and had made good stops at other points on that trip, and when inspection was made after the accident no defect could be found. He had had 3 months' experience as engineer and 15 years' previous experience as fireman. He had been on duty 18½ hours, with an intermediate rest of about 2 hours. This period of service followed a layover rest of 17 hours.

CASE No. 28.

Statement of cause: "Snowplow ran into rear of caboose. Hours on duty, 18."

The facts: This train was fighting snow in the dark, opening up the line of road, and it was an impossibility to relieve the crew at the end of 16 hours. In the confusion the snowplow struck the rear of a freight train standing on the main track at station.

At or near Dakota City, Nebr., February 9, 1905; time, 11.20 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $1,350. J. F. Loudy, conductor, age 40 years, killed. Freight train No. 16, north, standing on main track at station unloading freight. Snowplow extra, north, ran into their rear end, demolishing No. 16's caboose and badly damaging engine and caboose of snowplow extra. Conductor Loudy and two passengers in caboose of No. 16 injured, Loudy dying in a few hours. Engineer of snowplow extra held at fault for this accident; in our service 7 years as fireman and engineer. He had been on duty 18 hours at time of accident, fighting snow.

CASE No. 29.

Statement of cause: "Let engine run out at other end of switch and fouled main track. Hours on duty, 18."

The facts: The schedule time of this run was nine hours and thirty minutes. The train on this day met with very unusual delays; but a great part of the time was put in at stations where there was nothing for the crew to do. The accident really occurred from the failure of the flagman to put down torpedoes, which failure can not be attributed to long duty hours. There is very light traffic on this line, and it was unusual to have a wreck train to look out for, which was the kind of train that ran into them.

At or near North Berne, Ohio, December 2, 1903, 9.50 p. m.; time, dark; damage, $1,800. P. B. Poling, freight conductor, age 24, instantly killed (train No. 73). M. L. Dittmar, engineman, age 33, on wreck train, finger amputated and numerous cuts and bruises. Robert Morton, fireman (wreck train), age 26, arm sprained, jumping from engine before collision. George Siegfried, jr., car repairman, age 30, occupied seat in tool car on wreck train and had finger sprained. Wreck train extra west, engineman, M. L. Dittmar; fireman, Robert Morton; engine 1811 and ten cars ran into rear of freight train No. 73, west, caboose, and thirty cars while the latter was standing on main track—the head end of No. 73, engine 8814, and three cars was switching on siding—killing and injuring the above employees and damaging engine 1811 to the extent of about $1,200, destroying caboose of No. 73's train, valued at about $360, and damaging other cars to the extent of about $240. The damage was partly the result of fire starting from the caboose stove. The accident was the result of conductor of No. 73, P. B. Poling, and rear brakeman of No. 73, Frank Atwood, being asleep in their caboose and not protecting their train properly. Both of these men were experienced railroaders, having been in the train service of this company over three years. They had been on the road, however, thirteen hours and ten minutes on the day previous to the accident with only four hours' rest before going out on this run, and they had been on the road eighteen hours when the accident occurred.

CASE No. 30.

Statement of cause: "Engine crew of freight train forgot passenger train. Hours on duty, 19."

The facts: An extra freight train collided with a passenger train that was on time, the engine crews of the freight train forgetting passenger train. The freight train was within twenty minutes of the end of their run, and there is nothing to indicate that any member of its crew was not wide awake. Their being on duty over sixteen hours was caused by the delay in doing switching and meeting trains en route and getting a helper engine at Navarre, and this being within an hour's run of their home terminal, and there being no facilities at that point for taking care of the engine and crew, there was no way that the crew could be cut out of service at the completion of their sixteen hours' duty.

At or near Canton (yard), Ohio, March 6, 1905; time, dark; estimated damage, $3,064. G. G. Wise, freight engineman, age 40 years, killed; F. Stantz, freight engineman, age 29 years, killed; H. J. Johnson, passenger engineman, age 34 years, right ankle and right hand cut; C. Howe, passenger fireman, age 28 years, back injured; W. B. Wesner, passenger baggageman, age 28 years, back injuried. Westbound extra freight train engines 566 and 569 collided head on with east-bound passenger train No. 30 at east end of Canton yard; train 30 on time, engine crews of freight train forgetting passenger train. Both freight engines, three freight cars, and one coach badly damaged. Passenger engine and two freight cars slightly damaged. Freight train was within twenty minutes of end of their run. Engineman Wise in company's employ five years; had been on duty nineteen hours with ten hours' rest. Engineman Stantz in company's employ six years and five months; had been on duty nineteen hours with twenty hours' rest. Fireman Ellithorp, with Engineman Wise, in company's employ four years as brakeman and fireman; had been on duty nineteen hours with ten hours' rest. Fireman O'Hara, with Engineman Stantz, in company's employ four months (no other railroad experience); had been on duty nineteen hours with twenty hours' rest.

CASE No. 31.

Statement of cause: "Failed to wait prescribed time. Hours on duty, 15."

The facts: The immediate cause of this accident was the failure of the conductor to wait at Kise the prescribed time after the departure of No. 38, and for running through the dense fog at too high a rate of speed, knowing that No. 38 was only a few minutes ahead of them. The conductor who was responsible for the accident had been on duty six hours and forty minutes. This accident could not be attributed to overwork.

At or near Cherry, Ky., May 20, 1905; time, dark; estimated damage, $600. William Fultz, conductor extra 98, white, age 32, contusion of right hand and right arm and forehead bruised; Edward Walker, brakeman, train 38, white, age 25, right knee sprained; Charles Cooper, engineman, extra 98, white, age 46, left ankle wrenched and head bruised; W. M. Greene, fireman, extra 98, white, age 22, sprain and contusion of left shoulder. Extra 98, east bound, light engine, running at a speed of about 30 miles per hour, straight track, level grade, ran into rear of train 38, east bound, passenger, consisting of engine 92 and coaches 330 and 334, all air and working, which was running at a speed of about 15 miles per hour, damaging engines 92 and 98 and coaches 330 and 334. Damage to equipment, $600. Conductor and engineman of extra 98 are responsible for the accident for failure to wait at Kise the prescribed time after the departure of No. 38, and for running through the dense fog at too high rate of speed, knowing that No. 38 was but a few minutes ahead of them. Conductor in service four years, engineman in service nineteen years. Conductor had been on duty six hours and forty minutes and had four hours and eighteen minutes' rest before going on duty. Train No. 38 had a slight accident at Kise, near Cherry, just before this accident, and a crew had to be sent out from Ashland with equipment in case a transfer of passengers was necessary, in consequence of which the conductor had to be called before giving him his usual rest, account no other conductor available. Engineman had been on duty fifteen hours and twenty-five minutes, and had twelve hours' rest before going on duty. This engineman was working on yard engine at Ashland and had been on duty about twelve hours when he had to be called for this extra duty account no other engineman available. The injuries to the eighteen passengers consisted mostly of bruises, shake ups, etc.; there were no bones broken, and none of the injuries were of a serious nature.

CASE No. 32.

Statement of cause: "Head-on collision of freight and extra. Hours on duty, twenty-one."

The facts: The length of time the men had been on duty had nothing to do with the accident. It occurred in broad daylight, with a freight train pulling into the yard and the switch engine standing on the main track having hold of some cars on a spur. The flagman of the switch engine gave the engineer of the freight a stop signal, which he mistook for a signal that the track was clear. When the signal was given he had the air brakes applied, and then released them, and upon getting the second stop signal he did not have time to pump up his air to get sufficient pressure to apply the brakes to prevent the collision.

At or near North Canton (yard), Ohio, September 8, 1905; time, daylight; estimated damage, $2,300. J. Klein, engineman, age 25, right foot and ankle sprained. East bound freight train, extra engine 679, collided head on with yard engine No. 2 at Fertilizer switch at North Canton, doing damage to both engines and slight damage to five box cars. Engineman Klein and Conductor Fry, of the extra, at fault. Engineman Klein had been on duty twenty-one hours, with fourteen hours rest, and in company's employ six years as fireman and one year as engineman; no foreign experience. Conductor Fry had been on duty twenty-one hours, with twenty-four hours' rest, and in company's employ four years as brakeman and six years as conductor; four years foreign experience on Erie Railroad.

Accident reports as they appear in the Rice pamphlet and as they appear in sworn statements made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by railway managers—Continued.

CASE No. 33.

Statement of cause: "Failure to flag train. Hours on duty, fifteen."
The facts: The company's report states, "Extra stopped, account air sticking, and conductor and rear brakeman failed to flag the regular train following." The crew had been on duty fifteen hours, after forty-eight hours' rest.

At or near Loami, Ill., February 1, 1903; time, 12.22, night; estimated damage, $1,800. J. W. McCarthy, engineer, age 30, ankle sprained in jumping from engine. Extra freight train north on short time ahead of regular freight train No. 44, north. Extra stopped account air sticking, and conductor and rear brakeman failed to flag the regular train following. Wreck caught fire, burning caboose and one box car, and portion of one coal car; slight damage to machinery of second engine, and tank frame broken. Conductor had two years' experience as freight conductor, preceded by five years as freight brakeman; brakeman had fourteen months on this line; crew had been on duty fifteen hours, after forty-eight hours' rest.

CASE No. 34.

Statement of cause: "Overlooked open switch. Hours on duty, twenty."
The facts: Accident caused by running into open switch. The engineer was at fault for failing to notice that switch light was not burning. He had been on duty ten hours forty minutes at the time, including two hours' lay over at St. Louis, and had twenty-five hours' rest before going out. Blame also attached to the brakeman, who had requested the fireman to close the switch, and the latter agreed to do so. Both the brakeman and fireman had been on duty about ten hours from Galesburg, where they had a four-hour lay over. In order to get twenty hours for the brakeman and fireman the time going and returning, including the four-hour lay over at Galesburg must be included. They had both had forty-four hours' rest before going out.
There is nothing to show that excessive hours had anything to do with this accident.

At Beardstown, Ill., October 7, 1903; time, 12.40 a. m., dark; estimated damage, $5,100. Four injured—(1) brakeman, aged 26, left thigh slightly bruised, fell against seat in chair car; (2) mail clerk, aged 33, left shoulder slightly bruised, fell against mail rack; (3) mail clerk, aged 38, left hip slightly bruised, thrown against mail rack; (4) nose slightly bruised, thrown against seat in front. North bound passenger train, consisting of engine and six cars, all equipped with air brakes in working order, while running at a speed of about 20 miles per hour, struck an open switch and ran in on side track, colliding with cars standing on track, seriously damaging the engine, mail, baggage, four box and two tank cars. The contents of the tank car took fire, causing more loss than ordinarily would have occurred by the collision. The switch was left open by a freight-train crew, which had used track a short time previous. Brakeman of freight train should have closed switch, but requested fireman on the engine to do so, and the latter agreed to do so, but forgot it after engine had cut off and had pulled out on main track to go to roundhouse. Fireman at fault; was employed as engine wiper three years and locomotive fireman nine months. On duty twenty hours after several days lay off.

CASE No. 35.

Statement of cause: "Engineman asleep. Hours on duty, nine and three-fourths."
The facts: The report of the company to the Commission states: "Engineman Morgan, who was instantly killed, supposed to have been asleep."

At or near Davisville, W. Va., October 29, 1903; time, daylight; estimated damage, $7,000. Killed: Engineman, aged 27; fireman, aged 24. Injured: Brakeman, aged 22. Train 86, engine 1287, collided with second 97, damaging engine 2260 to the extent of $2,000; engine 1287 to the extent of $2,000. Damage to cars, $3,000. Accident due to negligence of crew. Engineman Morgan, who was instantly killed, supposed to have been asleep; he had only three hours' rest before leaving on this trip. Conductor Frederick suspended thirty days. Brakeman S. Proudfoot suspended fifteen days. Flagman Payne suspended thirty days. Conductor Frederick has been in the service ten years. Brakeman Proudfoot two years, Flagman Payne five years. Service records good.

CASE No. 36.

Statement of cause: "Conductor not being out on train. Hours on duty, twenty."
The facts: The general manager of the Baltimore and Ohio, of date November 27, 1906, writes: "The words 'conductor on duty twenty hours' do not appear in our report. As a matter of fact, the train crew had been on duty thirteen hours thirty-nine minutes. The hours on duty had nothing to do with the accident, which was caused by the train being parted. But for a dense fog they would have known their train was parted before they struck."
Some one seems to have inserted the words "Conductor on duey twenty hours" in the company's report without their knowledge.

At or near Burton, W. Va., October 3, 1903; time, dark; estimated damage, $284.50. One brakeman killed. First 89, engine 2268, west, broke off helper engine 1500, caboose and two cars, and collided with front portion of train, which was stopped to pull in siding for train 8. Conductor responsible for not being out on train himself and seeing that brakemen were properly instructed. Brakeman killed was caught between cars when they collided. Conductor employed October, 1896; on duty twenty hours.

CASE No. 38.

Statement of cause: "Engineman failed to have engine under control. Hours on duty, twenty."
The facts: There is nothing to indicate that this accident was caused by anybody being asleep. The statement made by the company to the Commission is that it was caused by the engineman's "failing to approach the end of double track under full control."
The letter from the general manager says: "The words 'engineman in service since April, 1900, on duty twenty hours,' do not appear in our copy of the report sent in to the Interstate Commerce Commission."
This was a round trip run.

At or near Narrows, October 13, 1903; time, daylight; estimated damage, $230; 1 brakeman injured. First 95—engine 2243 west sidewiped train of O. R. division engine 297 account switch spiked. Engineman engine 2243 X responsible, for failing to approach end of double track under full control. Brakeman slightly injured by jumping. Engineman in service since April, 1900; on duty, twenty hours.

CASE No. 39.

Statement of cause: "Carelessness of engineman. Hours on duty, seventeen."
The facts: "Engineer had been on duty five hours and twenty minutes, previous to which he received nine hours' rest."
The foregoing appears in the company's report to the Commission.

At or near Ullin, Nev.; November 30, 1903; time, dark; estimated damage, $2,600; one trainman killed. Engine on east-bound freight train 216 ran low on water and cut loose from train, running ahead to next station for water. In returning light engine collided with two light east-bound engines running extra. Fireman on 216's engine killed; three engines badly damaged. Accident was due to carelessness of train crew on 216 and engineer on head light engine. Conductor and brakemen have had five, ten, and one years' experience, and engineer five years. Train crew had been on duty seventeen hours, previous to which they had received thirteen hours' rest. Engineer had been on duty five hours and twenty minutes, previous to which he received nine hours' rest.

CASE No. 42.

Statement in table: "Misunderstanding of signals. Hours on duty, eighteen."
The facts: There was no claim that this accident occurred on account of the hours of duty. There was a dispute between the bridge watchman and the engineman, the bridge watchman claiming that he had opened the draw for a boat and had signaled the engineer to stop. The engineman claimed that he had made the stop, and had afterwards received a signal from the bridge tender to come ahead.
These facts were fully stated in the company's report to the Commission.

At or near McGirts Creek, Florida; January 13, 1904; time, dark; estimated damage, $2,000. W. P. Atkinson, engineeer, ankle sprained; Rufus Everly, fireman, face bruised. Engine 501, train No. 212, in charge of Engineman W. P. Atkinson; conductor, Livingston, ran into open draw at McGirts Creek. Engineman claims he made the usual stop, and received a signal from the bridge tender to come ahead; bridge watchman claims he opened bridge for a boat to stop and signaled 212 north bound to stop. Facts developed that the bridge light displayed were at angles, which should have warned the engineman that the bridge was turned. Experience of Engineman Atkinson, fifteen years; had been on duty eighteen hours, after ten hours' rest. Engineman Atkinson responsible. Engine and two cars submerged.

Accident reports as they appear in the Rice pamphlet and as they appear in sworn statements made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by railway managers—Continued.

CASE No. 43.

Statement in table: "Crew not taking proper precautions. Hours on duty, twenty-four."

The facts: This statement is not correct. The crew on engine No. 151 were held responsible for not keeping a lookout to see the snowplow, which was only ten car lengths ahead around the curve of the hill. This crew had only been on duty eleven hours, and had had twenty-four hours' previous rest. The other crew was on a snowplow at a time when the weather conditions were unusually severe, and it was practically impossible to keep the snowplow crew within the sixteen hours. It was the duty of the brakeman to look after the rear of the train; and he had had eight hours' rest before leaving Traverse City, so that he had been on duty only ten hours at the time of the accident.

No one in any way responsible for the accident had been on duty more than eleven hours.

At or near Kopje, Mich.; January 24, 1904; time, 11.10 a. m. (daylight); estimated damage, $585; one brakeman slightly hurt about face; one brakeman cut over right eye, not serious. Freight train No. 55, north bound, engine 151, running as second 55, ran into rear end of snowplow extra north, engine 164 running as first 55. First 55 left White Cloud at 10 a. m., second 55 at 10.25 a. m. First 55 lost time account of engine leaking, and second 55 came up with them 1 mile north of Kopje, at a point where train could not be seen more than ten car lengths ahead account of curve around hill, and as train crew on first 55 had not taken the precaution to throw off any signals, and as the crew on engine 151 (second 55) were not keeping sharp lookout at that point, they did not see train in time to stop. The speed of second 55 at time of the accident was probably 20 to 30 miles per hour They had fourteen cars in train, all loads; ten of them were air cars, air coupled up. Crew were disciplined. On No. 55 first: Engineer, three years in service, on duty 24 hours; previous rest, 24 hours; brakeman, 5 years' service, twenty-four hours on duty, seven hours' rest; brakemen, one month in service, twenty-four hours on duty, twenty-four hours' rest. On second No. 55: Engineer twelve years in service, eleven hours on duty, twenty-five hours' previous rest; fireman, three months in service, eleven hours on duty, thirteen hours' rest; brakeman, ten days in service, eleven hours on duty, thirteen hours' previous rest.

CASE No. 44.

Statement in table: "Engineman disobeyed orders. Hours on duty, fifteen."

The facts: This accident was caused by disobedience of orders, having no relation to length of hours.

At or near Diaz, Ark.; January 26, 1904; time, 11.05 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $2,050; nine passengers injured, one killed; engineer, age 48, injury to shoulder, elbow, and leg; fireman, age 39, injury to left leg and side; passenger train, east, one engine damaged, four cars destroyed, one coach damaged, and one sleeper slightly damaged; damage to equipment, $1,950; damage to track, $100. Accident caused by engineer coming out on main line without orders. Had been in service of the company since 1886, and had ten hours and five minutes' rest prior to going on duty, and had been on duty fifteen hours and forty minutes.

CASE No. 46.

Statement of cause: "Engineman; train getting away. Hours on duty, 17."

The facts: The report of this accident, made by the company to the Commission, is as follows: "The evidence shows that the train had been stopped at Wilsons on account of trouble with brake rigging on eighth car from the engine. They took brake head off brake beam and cut air out. The train made a very smooth run until reaching Hitchcock's tunnel, where it was noticed that it commenced to run at an excessive speed. Brakemen doubled and applied hand brakes on all cars, and in so doing broke brake chains, rendering 3 additional brakes inoperative."

The entire crew were very wide awake and alert; and the accident was caused solely by trouble with the brake appliances.

At or near Everetts Tunnel, W. Va., February 17, 1904; time, daylight; estimated damage, $4,905. Fireman F. Eagan, age 22 years, killed; engineman, age 35 years, injured. Extra east, engine 1817, train consisted of 20 loaded cars; 16 air brakes, 2 inoperative account of broken brake heads; derailed engine and 20 cars in curve just west of Everetts Tunnel. Evidence shows train had been stopped at Wilsons on account of trouble with brake rigging on eighth car from engine, and they took brake head off brake beam and cut air out. The train made a very smooth run until reaching Hitchcock's tunnel, where it was noticed that it commenced to run at an excessive speed. Brakemen doubled and applied hand brakes on all cars, and in so doing broke brake chains, rendering 3 additional brakes inoperative. The only reason that can be assigned for train getting away is that engineman, 12 years' experience, knowing he was on short time ahead of passenger train permitted engine to run at an excessive speed before taking up speed of train, and then he could not control it. Train was in charge of conductor, 15 years' experience; 1 brakeman, 8 years of experience; 1 brakeman, 3 years, and 1 brakeman, 14 months. Engineman had had 4 hours' rest and had been on duty 17 hours prior to accident. Engineman had leg broken and generally bruised up by jumping from engine.

CASE No. 47.

Statement of cause: "Conductor failed to give signal. Hours on duty, 15; hours of rest, 25."

The facts: The train backed into an open switch; and the conductor, engineer, and brakemen were held jointly responsible for the accident. The hours of service had absolutely nothing to do with the accident. The conductor, Devaney, and the brakeman, Miller, who were primarily responsible, had not been on duty to exceed 6 hours at the time of the accident.

At or near Pennock (Yard), Minn., February 11, 1904; time, dark; estimated damage, $14,500. C. B. Wilson, brakeman, age 22, slight bruise on head. Has had 1 year and 1 month's experience as brakeman with this company; no experience with other roads. At time of accident had been on duty 14 hours and 58 minutes, with previous rest of 25 hours. J. W. Williams, porter, age 25, back hurt. Has had 6 months' experience with this company; no experience with other roads. Had been on duty 5 hours at time of accident. West bound passenger train, No. 3, ran by Pennock Station, which is a flag stop for that train. On account of having 2 passengers for that point and conductor failing to give engineer signal until station had been passed train stopped about one-quarter of a mile west and backed up to station to let off passengers. The train backed into an open switch and collided with rear end of eastbound freight train, No. 256. W. H. Hill, W. J. Heffner, and C. J. Hanscomb, passengers in caboose, received injuries resulting in death; A. J. Sathney, another passenger in caboose, was seriously injured. Trainmen on train No. 3, shown above, also received slight injuries. The stove in caboose 0118, set fire, entirely consuming caboose 0118, sleeping car 937, and G. N. box car 21466; value estimated at $14,450; track damaged to extent of $50. Conductor J. P. Devaney, Engineer G. P. Irvin, and Brakeman C. B. Wilson, on train No. 256 are held jointly responsible for accident.

CASE No. 48.

Statement of cause: "Disobeyed signals. Hours on duty, 48, 47½ hours."

The facts: This was a wrecking crew. There had been serious freshets just previous to this accident, and the train in question had been handling a pile driver and carpenter force in repairing washouts. At the time of the accident they were returning to Olean, where they would have discontinued work. They were only technically on duty 47½ hours. While waiting for the carpenters to do their repair work the train crew had frequent and extended intervals of several hours at a stretch when they secured sleep and rest. It was an impossibility to relieve this crew and put another in their place while they were on this duty because of these washouts, the result of spring freshets, and we were obliged to adopt the most available means for resuming the operation of the road. No one was claiming to be overworked at the time of the accident. It was a question of veracity. The operator who gave the signal claimed that it was "red," while the train crew claimed that it was "white."

The report of the company to the Commission states: "Investigation indicates that operator was at fault for the accident, but responsibility could not be definitely placed." If so, the train crew were not responsible; and in any event their hours of service were not a contributing cause.

Three-fourths of a mile north of Portage, N. Y., March 9, 1904; time, 6.33 a. m.; dark; estimated damage, $1,800. Fireman, age 22, killed. Fireman, age 24, seriously injured. Conductor, age 40, slightly injured. Engineman, age 46, seriously injured. Engineman, age 40, seriously injured. Four brakemen, ages 34, 28, 26, and 22, slightly injured. Extra work train 6249 south was returning to Olean from Mount Morris, and they received orders at Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Junction to meet extra 6255 north at Rossburg, but were detained several hours at West Nunda, meeting other trains, and in order not to delay extra 6255 order was placed at Deep Cut for extra 6249 to meet extra 6255 at Lewis. Extra 6249 failed to get this order at Deep Cut and collided with extra 6255, causing damage to both engines, track, and 6 cars to extent mentioned, killing fireman and injuring 8 trainmen. Crew of extra train 6249 claim that signal was in their favor when they passed Deep Cut, but operator claims that signal was set against them, and his statement is corroborated by an extra laborer who was at work near telegraph office. When extra 6249 passed, operator seized a red flag and tried to attract their attention, but was unable to do so. Engineman and conductor of extra 6249 exceeded speed limit, which is restricted to 8 miles per hour at this point. Investigation indicates that operator was at fault for the accident, but responsibility could not be definitely placed. Engine and train crews of extra 6249 had been out of Olean for nearly 48 hours, but had some opportunity to rest. Engineman and fireman of engine 6249 had been on duty for 47½ hours, but were able to rest by first one handling the engine and then the other, when they were doing repair work; operator has had 1 month 19 days' experience. Conductor sustained contusions of body. Engineman of extra 6249 sustained fractured clavicle and scapula, scalp wound, and general contusions of body. Engineman of extra 6255 sustained fracture of 3 ribs on right side and severe contusion of right shoulder and arm. Fireman of extra 6255 sustained burns and contusions of body, lower limbs being crushed and scalded. Died 8 hours after accident. Fireman of extra 6249 had left shoulder dislocated. Brakemen of extra 6249 sustained burn of right hand and body badly bruised and severe scalp wound and contusions of entire body, respectively. Brakeman of extra 6255 sustained general contusions of body, latter also having left shoulder dislocated. These injuries were sustained by reason of men being thrown about when collision occurred, with the exception of dead fireman, who was caught between his engine and tender by wreckage.

CASE No. 51.

Statement of cause: "Did not keep lookout. Hours on duty, 17½."

The facts: This train had just reached its destination. The Pennsylvania Company were at that time (1903) constructing second main track over this division, and the freight trains were unusually and unavoidably slow on this account. The long hours could not have been prevented, as the company was doing everything possible and spending large sums of money to provide two tracks in order to prevent just such delay. This accident was in no way due to long hours. If the fireman had been on his seat box as they pulled from one yard track to another, he would have seen the engine ahead in time to notify the engineman.

At or near Chicago, Ill., August 13, 1903; estimated damage, $125. One yard engineman, age 60, legs, back, and hands scalded. Extra engine 7307 backing two cabin cars south collided with extra light engine 7140, south bound. Damage as follows: Engines, $122; track, $3.37; total, $125.37. Engineman of engine 7307 held at fault for not keeping a lookout and also for not seeing that his fireman was on engine seat box, which would undoubtedly have prevented accident. Experience, five years. Had been on duty about seventeen hours thirty minutes, and had just reached destination. Eighteen hours' rest before going on duty. Steam pipe was broken, which caused injury to the engineman.

CASE No. 54.

Statement of cause: "Flagman failed to get back proper distance. Hours on duty, 17½."

The facts: This was a round-trip run from Nashville to Hollow Rock Junction and return. Hollow Rock Junction was a very unhealthy place, and the men much preferred to return to Nashville. The trip could ordinarily be made within the sixteen hours. The accident was primarily caused by the engineman on No. 59 failing to keep proper lookout for an extra ahead. He had been on duty eleven and one-half hours, prior to which he had ninety-four and one-half hours' rest. The hours of duty had nothing to do with this accident. The engineman knew that the extra was right ahead, from the fact that he had seen them only 8 miles from the point of collision. They failed to approach the station under proper control.

At or near White Bluff, Tenn., October 2, 1904; time, dark; estimated damage, $5,000. One freight passenger killed; three trainmen injured—engineman, age 33; fireman, age 22; brakeman, age 34. No. 59 ran into rear of extra, east bound. Five cars and caboose destroyed account wreckage catching fire. One engine and one car badly damaged; one car slightly damaged. Extra was slowing down to enter siding to meet an opposing train; flagman failed to get back the required distance, and engineman on No. 59 failed to keep proper lookout for extra ahead. Engineman had been employed in that capacity four and three-fourths years and had been on duty eleven and one-half hours, prior to which he had had ninety-four and one-half hours' rest. Flagman had been employed in that capacity ten years, and had been on duty seventeen and one-half hours, with one hour intermission, and had eighteen and one-half hours' rest prior to starting on this trip. Injuries to engineman, fireman, and brakeman, slight sprains as result of jumping from engine.

CASE No. 55.

Statement in table: "Not properly equipped with flagging signals. Hours on duty, 18."

The facts: The report of the company to the Commission states: "The conductor, engineer, and flagman on freight train were responsible for this acident, on account of not seeing that they were properly equipped with flagging signals; and the flagman had not been properly instructed how to use the same."

At or near Swifton, Ark., November 22, 1904; estimated damage, $30,350; time, 5.57 a. m.; dark. Ten passengers injured. Fireman, age 36, killed; engineer, age 44, right arm broken; brakeman, age ——, right hand injured; porter, age 50, injury to chest. Freight train north and passenger. One baggage car and three coaches destroyed; engine damaged; one sleeper damaged; seven cars had bodies destroyed; six cars slightly damaged; damage to equipment, $30,050; damage to track, $300. Conductor, engineer, and flagman on freight train were responsible for accident account not seeing they were properly equipped with flagging signals, and flagman properly instructed how to use same. Conductor had been in service of the company two years; had been on duty eighteen hours and had eight hours' rest prior to going on duty; engineer had been in service of company five years and had five years' experience on other roads; had been on duty eighteen hours and had eight hours' rest prior to going on duty; flagman had been on duty eighteen hours and had eight hours' rest prior to going on duty; had been in service of the company one month; four years' experience on other roads.

CASE No. 56.

Statement of cause: "Running at too high rate of speed; foggy weather. Hours on duty, 17."

The facts: The record shows that these men had been on duty sixteen hours and two minutes. At the time of the accident they were only 3 miles from their terminal station. The length of time on duty had no bearing on the accident, which was due to high rate of speed under a caution signal in a dense fog.

The accident happened at the nearest point where a train could have been sidetracked at the expiration of sixteen hours.

The train was on the road so long on account of the cold weather, which delayed both it and the trains it met along the road.

At or near Isleta, Ohio, December 15, 1904; time, 5.50 a. m.; dark; estimated damage, $210. Four trainmen injured. Accident where T. W. V. and O. engine No. 7352, eastward, ran into the rear of T. W. V. and O. engine No. 7391. Accident at Isleta, Ohio, where extra eastward T. W. V. and O. engine 7352 (with caboose attached) ran into the rear of extra eastward T. W. V. and O. engine 7391 (with caboose attached). The responsibilty of the accident was placed with the engineman of engine 7352 on account of running at too high a rate of speed under a "green block." The weather was extremely foggy, and when engine 7352 sighted engine 7391 they were running at too high a rate of speed to get stopped before colliding with the other engine. The engineman and fireman of engine 7352 are employed by the T. W. V. and O. division, and they stated that they had been on duty for seventeen (17) hours prior to the time of the accident, and that they had been allowed twelve hours' rest before going on duty. The engineman is a man of some experience, having served in the capacity of engineman on the T. W. V. and O. division for the past six years. The following is a list of the casualties: J. C. Cosgrove, engineman, 25 years, right shoulder and leg injured, also kneecap broken and left thumb dislocated. W. A. Perrine, conductor, 30 years, legs bruised and ankle sprained. W. D. Miller, brakeman, 25 years, right hand lacerated, right side of face and head bruised. A. R. Perkins, extra conductor, 29 years, left middle finger bruised and right leg lacerated. These men all reside at Toledo, Ohio.

CASE No. 58.

Statement of cause: "Engineman not seeing flagman in time on account of smoke. Hours on duty, 20."

The facts: The length of time the crew had been on duty was not responsible for the accident. All the members of the crew were awake and alert, and the flagman had gone back and given the proper signal, but it was obscured by the smoke from the engine. There was no reason for anyone to think that the signal could not be seen. The accident resulted solely from the obscurity thus caused, and not from any negligence whatever.

At or near Onward, Ind., October 6, 1901; time, dark; estimated damage, $5,365.40. Elbert Greeley, conductor, age 35, instantly killed; T. P. Brosius, brakeman, age 27, instantly killed; S. A. Galbraith, brakeman, age 28, instantly killed. These three men were deadheading on second section No. 79. J. W. Hutchins, fireman, age 25, instantly killed; F. W. Patterson, engineman, age 29, body and limbs badly bruised. Freight trains, second and third sections No. 79, westbound; third section ran into rear of second section. Three trainmen deadheading home in their cabin car, which was attached behind second Accident reports as they appear in the Rice pamphlet and as they appear in sworn statements made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by railway managers—Continued.

The report made by the company to the Interstate Commerce Commission shows this clearly. The flagman who gave the signal was a member of the crew of a switch engine which on Sunday had been sent to Logansport for repairs and was returning. The condition of the engine delayed the train, and the collision occurred while they were stopping on the main track to blow up steam. The other train involved was a work train also en route to Logansport to remain over Sunday for repairs.

section No. 79's cabin car, and fireman of engine attached to third section No. 79 were instantly killed. Two cabin and three side-dump cars in second section No. 79 and six refrigerator cars in third section No. 79 destroyed, and six other freight cars in third section No. 79 more or less damaged. This accident due to second section of No. 79 having to stop on main track to blow up steam and engineman on third section not seeing flagman in time to get stopped. The flagman on second section No. 79 went back to flag as soon as he could, but only got back about seventeen car lengths. It was a clear night and the flagman believed the following train would have no difficulty in seeing his signal in sufficient time to get stopped, as the headlight could be plainly seen. Between the flagman and the approaching train there was a strip of woodland, and it was thought the smoke from the engines on the leading train hung over the tracks between the trees just high enough to obscure the view of the engineman on third section on account of the higher position he occupied, while the flagman, as well as the balance of the crew on second section, could plainly see the headlight approaching and had no reason to think the signal could not be seen. The engineman on the third section saw the markers of the second section as he was leaving Bunker Hill, several miles east of where the accident occurred, but lost sight of them on account of the grades, and when he reached a point where he could again have seen them his view was obscured by the smoke, as described above. The flagman on second section No. 79 has had 2 years 9 months' experience as brakeman, and had been on duty about 20 hours, less 2 hours' intermission, and had 14 hours' rest before this. The engineman on third section No. 79 has had 8 years' experience as fireman and engineman, had been on duty about 22 hours, less 3 hours' intermission, and had 29 hours' rest before starting on this trip.

CASE No. 59.

Statement of cause: "Engineman of freight pulled out ahead of passenger train. Hours on duty, 17."

The facts: This man had 20 hours' rest before starting to work. He was on a turn run, and there was no opportunity for him to take rest until arrival at Logansport. The men very much prefer returning to their home terminal rather than to lay over at Bernice, where there was no opportunity to take proper rest. This occurred in 1901.

There is nothing to show that the accident was caused by excessive hours.

At or near Ripley, Ind., September 16, 1901; time, dark; estimated damage, $2,500. Four passengers injured, to wit: Fanny Dacosta, right forearm sprained, injury slight; William Sherridan, cut near right eye, injury slight; Dollie Earell, complained of having head bumped, injury slight; Francis Emmett, complained of having head bumped, injury slight. Freight train extra, engine 71, east, and passenger train 6, east bound. Passenger train ran into side of freight train, damaging passenger cars to extent of $165; freight cars, $1,945, and passenger engine No. 275; total, $2,500. Accident due to engineman of extra freight starting to pull out of siding ahead of passenger train, account of forgetting that train was on road. This man has had 12 years' experience as engineman, had been on duty 17 hours, but had 20 hours' rest before starting to work.

CASE No. 60.

Statement of cause: "Improper flagging. Hours on duty, 16."

The facts: The accident was caused by the failure of the brakeman to place torpedoes on the track. He stated that he did not consider the use of torpedoes necessary. He had been on duty a little over 16 hours, but no claim was made that the accident was caused by excessive hours.

At or near Marion, Mont., July 6, 1901; time, daylight; estimated damage, $8,000. Two firemen, 1 conductor, and 1 engineer injured. Fireman L. Eaton, head slightly cut, age 26; Fireman I. H. Eller, collar bone broken, 33 years; Conductor V. M. Hill, ankle sprained, age 45 years; Engineer P. J. Nolan, ankle sprained, age 38 years. Extra freight east No. 722 stopped to replace a broken knuckle. Meanwhile helper engine No. 725 came up and called in the flagman before the train and its helper could start. Freight train No. 10, following them, ran into their rear, badly damaging 2 engines, 22 cars, and 1 caboose. There was no damage incurred by fire. The accident was due to improper flagging. The brakeman directly responsible for it stated that he did not consider the use of torpedoes necessary. This man had been on duty from 5.30 p. m. of the day previous until the time the accident occurred, 10 a. m. He was a man of 18 years' railroad experience.

CASE No. 61.

Statement of cause: "Disobeyed rule respecting open switch. Hours on duty, 20."

The facts: A work train was standing on track in gravel pit, and switch leading from main line was left open. An express train dashed through the switch, resulting in a collision. The responsibility rested with the switchman, who failed to follow the rule of the company: "Whoever opens a switch shall remain at it until it is closed, unless relieved by some other competent employee."

There is not a word of evidence to show how long the man who left the switch open had been on duty. The record simply shows that the engineman, who apparently had had nothing to do with the switch being left open, had been on duty about 20 hours; but there is nothing to indicate any connection between this and the accident.

At or near Springfield, N. H., July 25, 1901; time, daylight; estimated damage, $1,640. One trainman killed, 3 injured. George H. Corliss, engineman, killed; Robert M. Simmons, fireman, slightly injured; George Sawyer, engineman, ankle sprained; Frank Holbrook, fireman, leg bruised. Work train No. 552 was standing on track in gravel pit, and switch leading from main line was left open. An express passenger train, No. 21, north bound, dashed through the switch, resulting in a serious collision. Engines of both trains were badly damaged, together with a baggage car, caboose car, and a flat car.

Responsibility for this accident rests with the engineman who was killed, the switchman, and telegraph operator. Had they observed the rule which reads, "Whoever opens a switch shall remain at it until it is closed unless relieved by some other competent employee," the accident would not have occurred. Engineman Corliss had been on duty continuously about 20 hours.

CASE No. 62.

Statement of cause: "Engineman responsible, not keeping proper lookout. Hours on duty, 22."

The facts: This accident occurred in daylight; nothing to show that the engineer was asleep. He simply failed to approach the station with his engine under proper control. Instead of being on continuous duty for 22 hours, the report of the company shows that he had 5 hours of rest within that period. This rest period may have come at such time that he had only 8 hours of continuous service.

At or near Norwich, N. Dak., June 22, 1902; time, dark; estimated damage, $400. E. J. Jennings, of Fargo, passenger, killed; A. H. Eckhart, passenger, contusion of back and legs, not serious; F. Martin, conductor, slight injuries to head; age, 25 years. While freight train 153, west bound, was standing at Norwich station for the purpose of unloading freight, light engine No. 311 ran into rear of same, damaging aaboose and one car. There were two passengers in caboose; one was fatally injured and died shortly aferwards; the other was slightly injured. The conductor was also slightly injured. Engineer of light engine responsible for not keeping proper lookout ahead and has been discharged. Had been on duty 22 hours, with 5 hours' rest during that length of time. Has been an engineer since 1892. Rules require all trains to approach all stations under control, and responsibility of accident rests mainly with following train. Damage to engine, $50; damage to equipment, $350.

CASE No. 63.

Statement of cause: "Approaching station at too high rate of speed to stop after seeing signal. Hours on duty, 17."

The facts: There is nothing to indicate that the accident was due to overwork on the part of the engineer. It was simply a case of error of judgment in the use of air brakes. The statement made by the company to the Commission was as follows: "No. 14 arrived just south of station and was slowing up to take siding. No. 15 approached the station at too high a rate of speed to stop after seeing red signal, although the operator had placed a torpedo on the track about 800 feet from the station and signaled the engineer to stop. The train

At or near Molino, Fla., June 10, 1902; estimated damage, $2,632. No one killed or injured. Butting collision between freight train No. 13, south, consisting of 14 loaded cars (6 with air brakes in service), and freight train No. 14, north, consisting of 6 loads and 1 empty (6 with air brakes in service). A train order had been given, to be delivered to No. 15 at Molino, making a meeting point between Nos. 14 and 15. No. 14 arrived just south of station and was slowing up to take siding. No. 15 approached the station at too high a rate of speed to stop after seeing red signal, although the operator had placed a torpedo on the track about 800 feet from the station and signaled ran past the station and collided with No. 14, which was almost stopped.

the engineer to stop. The train ran past the station and collided with No. 14, which was almost stopped. Both engines damaged, bodies of 1 gondola and two box cars destroyed, 1 gondola and 1 hopper car slightly damaged. Engineer of No. 15 was at fault for approaching train-order office with train not under control. He has had 4 years' experience as engineer. He had been on duty 17 hours and 45 minutes after a lay off of 3 days.

CASE No. 64.

Statement of cause: "Not protected by flag. Hours on duty, 15."
The facts: There was no connection between the number of hours of labor and the cause of the accident. The freight train (an extra) stopped at the water tank with its caboose standing on a steel trestle 40 feet high. It was a short distance ahead of the regular passenger, and the brakeman evidently figured that his train would not be there to exceed two minutes, so that he would not be taking any chances in not flagging the passenger. When the passenger train came around the curve where they could see the caboose the brakeman was standing on the rear platform with his lantern in hand. He was afraid to leave the caboose for fear the passenger train would catch him on the trestle. He was wide awake and fully aware of what was on, but could do nothing. The passenger train came up and s... the caboose and killed him.

At or near Wild Horse, Colo., February 2, 1902; time, 5.25 a. m.; moonlight; estimated damage, $1,000. Owen McCarthy, brakeman, age 35, killed. Employed by this company in such capacity one year. Previous record, 9 years' experience in like position. Freight train, extra, west on main line to take water; passenger train west No. 3 ran into rear end freight train, which was not protected by flag. Brakeman McCarthy, supposed to have flagged passenger train, was in caboose when collision occurred; killed instantaneously. Freight train crew on duty 15 hours; intermission 11 hours elapsed for rest between service. No fire caused by collision.

CASE No. 65.

Statement in table: "Carelessness of engineman. Hours on duty, 18."
The facts: This crew left Brainerd at 3.15 p. m., and arrived at Spur (75 miles) at 9.05 p. m., 5 hours 50 minutes. They left Spur for Brainerd at 9.50 p. m., expecting to make the return trip inside of six hours. They were delayed 3 hours meeting an extra, which was delayed on account of another train doubling a hill. There were no hotel accommodations whatever at Spur; all trainmen and enginemen preferred to make the double, Brainerd to Spur and return, instead of laying over at Spur. This crew had 40 hours' rest before making the trip.

At or near Hackensack, Minn., February 2, 1902; daylight; estimated damage, $3,500. None killed or injured. While extra south engine 7 was doubling out of siding, extra south engine 8, doubling into Hackensack, collided with rear of extra 7's train, ditching engine 8. One U. P. log flat car totally destroyed; 7 log flats considerably damaged. Cause, carelessness of engineer engine 8. Engineer engine 8 employed as fireman on M. and I. May 28, 1901, to June 15, 1901, and as engineer June 15, 1901, to February 2, 1902, and was engineer on other roads. He was on duty 18¾ hours when wreck occurred and had had 40 hours' rest previous to this trip.

CASE No. 67.

Statement of cause: "Disobeyed rule 99 in not properly protecting train. Hours on duty, 22."
The facts: This is entirely erroneous. The report made by the company states that the service was not continuous; "there was an interval of 5 hours 17 minutes for rest;" that is, the run was from Hagerstown to Rutherford, 12 hours 42 minutes, then 5 hours 17 minutes rest at Rutherford; then a run of 4 hours 36 minutes from Rutherford to Lurgan, where the accident occurred.
The Moseley statement simply adds together these three periods, taking no note of the intervening rest period.

At or near Lurgan, Pa., November 9, 1901; time, 3.05 a. m.; dark; estimated damage, $500. George Bowerd, age 24, brakeman, killed. Extra freight, westbound, ran into rear of extra Western Maryland freight at Lurgan, damaging the cabin car, which took fire from the cabin car stove, causing the destruction of the cabin and one box car. The flagman, George Bowerd, was caught in the wreckage, sustaining injuries which caused his death. Flagman Bowerd was on duty 22 hours and 35 minutes with an interval of 5 hours and 17 minutes for rest. He has been in service since December 29, 1900. Rule 99 violated.

CASE No. 68.

Statement of cause: "Conductor and brakeman at fault in moving train before track was clear. Hours on duty, 15."
The facts: There is no evidence in this case of long hours or overwork; the crew had two days' rest before starting. The accident was entirely due to lack of judgment. The trainmen tried to save perhaps thirty seconds of time by pulling up close to lead; they pulled ahead farther than intended, with the result that train was cornered by switch engine.

At or near Helena, Mont., December 1, 1902; time, 7.10 p. m.; estimated damage, $500. No personal injuries. Cars of extra west 17 cornered in yard. The train set back in yard about fifteen car lengths from the lead. Conductor gave instructions to have the train pull up close to the lead, and while doing so the train was cornered by cars being switched with switch engine. Train should not have moved until they had clear track to go. Conductor and brakeman at fault. Conductor ten years' experience; brakeman eleven years' experience as switchman and brakeman. Had been on duty 15 hours with 2 hours intermission. Damage to engine and three cars.

CASE No. 69.

Statement of cause: "Brakeman failed to go to far end of cars to see that they had cleared. Hours on duty, 18."
The facts: There is nothing to show that failure to take proper precautions was due to excessive hours of work. This crew had been on wrecking duty, clearing up a wreck.
The company's report to the Commission gives the following explanation of the cause of the accident: "Wrecker crew had placed eight cars on siding, striking cars which were standing on that track, and causing them to foul main track. Conductor instructed brakeman to go to other end of cars and see that they were in to clear properly. The brakeman reported that they were. This brakeman is responsible for failure to go to far end of cars and see that they were cleared." This law should not apply to wrecking crews.

At or near Boyles, Ala., December 22, 1902; time, 4.25 a. m.; estimated damage, $883. Injured: F. A. Woods, engineer, 45 years, bruises and abrasions of head, face, legs, and back; C. Harris, fireman, 32 years, bruises of shoulder, elbow, and side; Bob Green, brakeman, 27 years, slight bruises of elbow and shoulder. Freight train No. 73, south, consisting of seventeen loaded cars (all with air brakes in service) was running about 15 miles per hour and collided with side of freight cars which had been pushed out of siding so as to foul main track. Engine of No. 73 was considerably damaged. One box car destroyed and two cars slightly damaged. Engineer, fireman, and front brakeman of No. 73 were injured. Wrecker crew had placed eight cars on siding, striking cars which were standing on that track, and causing them to foul main track. Conductor instructed brakeman to go to other end of cars and see that they were in to clear properly. The brakeman reported that they were. This brakeman is responsible for failing to go to far end of cars and see that they cleared. He had had three years' experience. The conductor was also negligent in failing to see that brakeman carried out his instructions and failing to assure himself that the cars cleared. He has had six years' experience, four years as rear-end flagman, but only about ten days as conductor. These men had been on duty about 18 hours after 10 hours' rest. They had been on emergency duty with wrecker.

CASE No. 73.

Statement in table: "Flagman not far enough out to protect his train; discharged. Hours on duty, 16."
The facts: This crew was called at 1.30 p. m., November 27, after 46 hours previous rest. The accident occurred at 5 a. m., November 28, so that he had been on duty less than 14 hours.

At or near Portland, Mich., November 28, 1902; time, 5 a. m.; dark; estimated damage, $700. Injured: Fireman John Dunning, about 25 years old, arm and shoulder bruised jumping off engine. Flagman freight train No. 66 was not out far enough to protect his train and extra engine No. 80 ran into rear of train No. 56 (freight). Brakeman returned to way car of train No. 56 after having been sent out to protect by conductor. Brakeman given 60 demerits and discharged. In service one year. On duty 16 hours; off duty previous 24 hours.

CASE No. 74.

Statement of cause: "From not being properly protected. Hours on duty, 23."
The facts: This accident was caused by an extra train starting out without proper orders. A dense fog prevailed at the time. They stopped at Watts Siding to do some switching, and they had just got head car cut off when second No. 3 collided with their rear. The freight crew had only made a run of 95 miles, and pulled out notwithstanding attention was called to signals by whistle and acknowledged by the engineer.

At or near Watts Siding, Minn., November 1, 1902; time, 7.12 a. m.; daylight; estimated damage, $4,000. Killed: Charles Goff, conductor; J. C. Congdon, brakeman. Injured: J. W. Ryan, brakeman, lacerated wound of scalp; Martin Degnan, engineer, hand scratched. Passengers injured: A. M. McKinnan, hand bruised; R. S. Blachley, hand bruised; Andrew Hagan, left leg bruised; Alex. Gagner, bruise below left eye; Mary C. Adams, right knee bruised; John Senn, finger scratched. Injuries to passengers very slight. Rear-end collision between extra west 426 and second No. 3 west. Accident happened on main line, was caused by extra 426 west pulling out of Glyndon between first and second sections of train No. 3 without orders; a dense fog prevailed at the time. They stopped at Watts Siding to do switching without proper protection and they had just got head car cut off when second No. 3 collided with their rear. Conductor Goff and Engineer Geene, of extra west 426, responsible for accident. Had been on duty 23 hours. Had had 36 hours' rest before starting. Both old experienced men. Damage to No. 3's engine; seven cars damaged; four box cars burned after the collision.

CASE No. 77.

Statement of cause: "Conductor failed to set switch for siding; brakeman also failed to make proper effort to stop train. Hours on duty, 19."

The facts: An extra engine was putting train away in siding, and Devlin, conductor, failed to set switch for mountain siding. The train backed down on a grade crossing, resulting in a collision. All the train men were wide awake and on the ground, and the failure of the conductor to set switch properly was due to an oversight, which might have occurred under any circumstances.

There is nothing to show any connection between the accident and the hours on duty.

At or near Penn Haven Junction, Pa., November 30, 1902; time, 7.30 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $1,100. No one killed or injured. Extra engine, 604 east, was putting train away in siding, and William C. Devlin, conductor, failed to set switch for mountain siding; also failed to have his brakemen properly distributed on the train, resulting in train backing down on grade crossing and Central Railroad of New Jersey 460 colliding with the same. The investigation also showed that James J. Neary and Frank Henritzy, brakemen, failed to make proper effort to stop the train. These men had been on duty 19 hours 30 minutes, after having had 11 hours 30 minutes rest. William C. Devlin had had 13 years' experience; James J. Neary, 3 years, and Frank Henritzy, 8 years' experience.

CASE No. 79.

Statement of cause: "Brakeman failed to turn switch; train ran in on siding. Hours on duty, 19."

The facts: Rear-end collision, caused by brakeman failing to turn switch, throwing the train in on side track and striking the rear of freight train. He had not been on continuous duty for 19 hours. He had left Galesburg and gone to Quincy, a trip of 8 hours. At Quincy he had 3 hours 20 minutes rest, and, returning, had been on duty about 7½ hours when the accident occurred.

There is no reason for saying that this failure to properly turn the switch was caused by excessive hours of labor. He had had two days' rest before going on this trip.

At Saluda, Ill., July 25, 1902; time, 7.50 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $1,000. Slight injuries to five passengers. Brakeman, aged 43, head and right hand cut. North-bound freight train No. 68, consisting of engine and 48 cars (1,390 tons) pulled in on side track to allow passenger train No. 12 to pass. Brakeman was stationed at switch, and when the passenger approached switch he signaled train ahead; when too close to avoid it, the engineer of the passenger train (which consisted of engine and two coaches, all equipped with air brakes in working order) noticed the brakeman had failed to turn the switch, and train ran in on the siding, striking rear of freight train, badly damaging way car and engine. The brakeman injured was in the way car; passengers all slightly injured. The brakeman at fault; in service 12 years; on duty 19 hours after 36 hours' rest.

CASE No. 80.

Statement in table: "Crew went to sleep. Hours on duty, 24."

The facts: This is an incorrect statement. The crew went on duty at 10 p. m. September 4, after 11 hours' rest. They arrived at St. Joseph at 9.30 p. m. and remained there until 6.30 a. m. September 5—that is, they had 9 hours for rest and sleep. They left St. Joseph at 6.30 a. m., and the accident occurred at 2.20 p. m.; so that they had actually been on duty 7 hours 50 minutes.

The reason given for the formal statement in the company's report—"On duty, 24 hours," without any reference to the 9 hours of rest—was: "Being under orders, they were allowed full time, and were thus reported as having been on duty."

At or near New Richmond, Mich., September 5, 1902; time, 2.20 p. m., daylight; estimated damage, $390. No one injured or killed. Extra freight, south No. 174, collided with second section No. 57 north, engine No. 213. Second section No. 57 had orders to meet extra No. 174 at New Richmond and took siding at that place. They then received another order to also meet extra No. 233 south at same place. Train crew and engine crew No. 57 (second section) went to sleep and were awakened by whistle of engine No. 233. They supposed both extras had passed and started with train and collided with extra No. 174. Train crew of second section No. 57 had been on duty about 24 hours at time of accident. No personal injuries.

CASE No. 81.

Statement of cause: "Disobeyed rule 17, train taking siding not being in the clear. Hours of duty, two days."

The facts: This is an entire mistake, the result of a mere error in transmitting the report. As a matter of fact these trainmen had only been on this run 3 hours 45 minutes at the time of the accident and had ample rest prior to going on the trip. This is all fully explained in a letter written by the general manager, W. C. Nixon, to Mr. Moseley, of date January 20, 1903; but, notwithstanding the explanation, the table contains the statement that the conductor had been on duty 48 hours.

Whatever negligence there was, was on the part of the engineer.

At or near Manvel, Tex., October 5, 1902; time, 8 p. m., dark; estimated damage, $2,300. Injuries: C. Hawkins, engineer, foot sprained; M. J. Scott, conductor, head injured; J. Ginn, brakeman, slightly injured. Train 36 north bound and train extra south 684. Freight train ran into side of freight train on switch; engine 214 damaged $250. Six box cars destroyed and three box cars badly damaged. Both trains were all air and last inspected on date of accident. Accident caused by disregard of rule 17, train taking siding and not being in the clear and still having headlight exposed; should have warned train 36 to approach meeting point under control. Extra south was going into siding when struck by No. 36. M. J. Scott, conductor, no experience on other roads as conductor; one month on this road as conductor; had been on duty two days at time of accident. C. Hawkins, engineer, 12 years' experience as fireman and two months as engineer on this road; no experience on other roads. He had over ten hours' rest before going on this trip. On duty 3 hours 45 minutes at time of accident.

CASE No. 82.

Statement of cause: "Engineman at fault; in going back struck cars. Hours on duty, 20."

The facts: The train stalled and then doubled, and in going back for the rear end of the train the engineer struck the cars. There is nothing to show that the hours on duty had anything to do with the accident. The length of the division is 130 miles, and an average of 10 miles per hour would consume only 13 hours. In this case there was an unusual number of delays, largely caused by the train having parted and by being held to meet passenger trains.

If this crew had been tied up at the end of 16 hours, it would probably have been at a point where they could neither sleep nor get meals, and by the time they got to the terminal they would have lost more time and have been less fit to go out again than if they had been allowed to go through, even if it should take more than 16 hours.

At or near Culmerville, Pa., October 30, 1902; time, dark; estimated damage, $350. No injuries. Train, third section 33 south, stalled and doubled and in going back for rear end of train struck cars so as to cause above damage. Engineer at fault. Six years' experience as engineer. On duty 20 hours, continuous trip.

CASE No. 83.

Statement of cause: "Work train fouled main track without due protection. Rule: 'An inferior train must keep out of the way of a superior train.' Hours on duty, more than 15."

The facts: This accident occurred in 1902, to a work train engine, which had been in the shop at Fort Wayne over Sunday for washing out, etc. They had a rest in their bunk car, and went on their regular Monday's duty on the work train from Plymouth at 7 o'clock in the morning. The accident occurred at 5.35 p. m. Monday; 10 hours 35 minutes on duty. Excessive hours had nothing at all to do with the accident. The engineman simply overran the clearance point of the switch leading from the siding to the main track, in the dark.

At or near Plymouth, Ind., October 20, 1902; time, dark; estimated damage, $500. No injuries. Train No. 8 east bound and extra work train engine No. 313 east bound. Damage, two engines, $487.43; track, $5.54. Cause: Work train fouled main track without due protection, resulting in a "side swipe." Parties at fault in service 15 and 22 years, respectively. Engineman on duty more than 15 hours, with less than 7 hours' rest. Rule: "An inferior train must keep out of the way of a superior train."

CASE No. 86.

Statement of cause: "Engineman at fault for not stopping when semaphore was against him, and not having train under control. Hours on duty, 19."

The facts: The number of hours on duty had nothing to do with the accident. "Engineer Burns frankly admitted that when approaching crossing he saw an N. P. train passing over same, and that he also saw that semaphore signal was set against him, but thinking that tower man would give him the crossing in time to avoid necessity of stopping his train he allowed train to drift until too late to stop before going off track at derail."

At or near State Line, Wis., October 21, 1902; time, dark; estimated damage, $2,200. No injuries. East bound extra freight train No. 1146 had engine and nine cars derailed at State Line derail switch. Signal set against train but failed to stop. Estimated damage to equipment, $2,100, and to track, $100. Engineer J. P. Burns responsible for accident for not stopping when semaphore was against him and also for not having his train under control. He has been taken out of the service. Has been engineer with this company three years three months; no previous experience as engineer. Was on duty 19 hours.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before referring to the provisions of this bill and the criticisms which have been made of its terms, I wish to have read the telegrams and letters which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PEORIA, ILL., January 9–10, 1907.

R. M. LA FOLLETTE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I am opposed to penalizing employees for working over hours, as advocated by Senators GALLINGER and FORAKER.

JOHN J. HANNAHAN,
Grand Master Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, January 9–10, 1907.

Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen is decidedly opposed to the propositon to penalize employees for working in excess of hours to be designated by Congressional enactment. The amendments to that end are objectionable in every sense and simply intended to embarrass the employee and put up to him the enforcement of the law; the penalty clearly belongs to the employer who compels him to violate it.

P. H. MORRISEY,
Grand Master Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

LACROSSE, WIS., January 9, 1907.

Mr. R. M. LA FOLLETTE, Washington, D. C.:

Please use every effort to pass Senate bill 5133 and amendments in favor of railroad employees.

W. J. BARBER,
Secretary Brotherhood Railroad Trainmen.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 10, 1907.

ROBT. LA FOLLETTE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The general grievance committee Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, representing 3,000 members on the Chicago and Northwestern system, heartily indorse the proposed legislation relative to restriction of service hours for men in train and yard service.

A. F. WHITNEY, Chairman.

ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS OF AMERICA,
INDIANAPOLIS DIVISION 103,
Indianapolis, Ind., January 7, 1907.

H. R. FULLER, 206 Delaware avenue NE., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This afternoon a number of conductors, engineers, firemen, and brakemen were called before the staff officers of the Pennsylvania lines in Indianapolis, as employees in train service, to talk over the proposed La Follette bill now pending before this session of Congress pertaining to the limit of hours on duty and after that time requiring ten hours' rest. I can not give you the number of the bill, but I ask that you give me two or three copies of this original bill and give me your personal opinion and feelings regarding this bill. Give me all the advice pertaining to this measure, as I feel that it is one of the old tricks of the railroad officials, of their undermining way of trapping the many employees. Before I left this body of men I am glad to say that no steps will be taken until I hear from you in regard to this matter.

Very truly, yours in P. F.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
Basalt, Colo., December 8, 1906.

H. R. FULLER, Legislative Representative B. of L. E., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The general superintendent of the Colorado Midland Railroad has issued a circular asking the men to endeavor to defeat the La Follette bill against working railway men more than sixteen hours at a time without rest. This bill comes up for consideration in the Senate January 10, we understand. The men here are all in favor of a law along this line being passed. The members of this division, however, desire that I find out from you whether this is the bill which you are endeavoring to have passed in our behalf. Thanking you advance for an early reply, I am yours, fraternally.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
GENERAL BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT,
Lima, Ohio, December 9, 1906.

Mr. H. R. FULLER,
United States Legislative Representative,
206 Delaware avenue NE., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I would thank you, if it is not too much trouble, if you will send me a copy of the sixteen-hour Federal law, now pending action of the House, and has passed the Lower House, and comes up January 10, 1907, for final action. My superintendent has headed a remonstrance against its passage and has handed the chairman of each order a copy and asked them to get names of all trainmen to remonstrate, setting forth that such a law would be injurious to the employees and a reduction in pay. Now, I haven't read the bill, but I think it is a move in the right direction. Its passage and enforcement will cause the companies to get their trains over the roads in less time, and no crew should be kept on an engine longer than fifteen consecutive hours, and this law, I think, if passed will help us out and Lima Division No. 120, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, insists on its passage; also, all engineers on the Lake Erie and Western system—864 miles of road and 290 engineers, of which I am general chairman, and any information concerning this law you can furnish me with I will thank you for.

Thanking you for the many past favors shown us,

I beg to remain, respectfully and fraternally yours.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
FLOUR CITY DIVISION, No. 494,
Minneapolis, Minn., December 19, 1906.

H. R. FULLER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Just received yours of the 16th in answer to my telegram regarding Senate bill 5133, and I will say that the information in it will clear up a lot of false statements regarding this bill. All that I knew or heard about it came from our railroad officers, so you may know which side was shown up. Will be pleased to receive further information and instructions when the proper time comes, but give us all the time possible, as it takes time to get these things before the men.

Fraternally and truly,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, such criticism as has been urged respecting this bill, and particularly that made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] yesterday in his remarks, is made because there is no provision in the bill to prohibit men who may have been in service less than sixteen consecutive hours again going on duty without having a sufficient rest, thus, by working two or more periods of less than sixteen hours each, interrupted by only short intervals of rest, virtually defeating the purpose of the measure.

I think the criticism of the Senator from Colorado is a just one. Provision should be made to meet that criticism. It seems to me this can be done easily; and, if no one else offers such an amendment, I shall offer one which I believe will meet that objection.

However, I find on an examination of all the statutes of the different States that have enactments upon this subject that in every single instance the language used in these statutes with respect to this feature is precisely the language of this bill. It is manifestly apparent that whoever drafted the substitute provision reported by the committee for the bill which I introduced had before him the provisions of the different State enactments upon this subject.

Arizona provides in exactly this language against any railway employee who is concerned in the moving of trains from being employed more than sixteen consecutive hours, but it makes no provision for men who have been employed fifteen and a half hours.

The same is true of the Arkansas statute, which prohibits the working of those having to do with the operation of trains for more than sixteen hours in succession. The same is true of the Colorado statute, the language of that statute being as follows:

Act of 1901.

SECTION 1. No company operating a railroad in whole or in part within this State shall permit or require any conductor, engineer, fireman, brakeman, telegraph operator, or any trainman who has worked in his respective capacity for sixteen consecutive hours, except in case of casualty, to again go on duty or perform any work until he has had at least ten hours' rest.

The language of that statute is almost identical with the second section of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from Wisconsin has made a great study of this question, and it occurs to me to ask the Senator, as we are going on at this time, whether he does not think we could limit the hours to twelve instead of sixteen?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that such a provision would impose in many cases uncalled-for hardship upon the railroad companies and upon the employees as well. I believe by a very slight amendment to the bill under consideration provision can be made for exigencies which may arise where the service is cumulative and overruns the time limit for which men should be expected reasonably to be on duty, or where the service is consecutive in its nature and is for a somewhat shorter period than the sixteen hours mentioned in the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit, I asked him the question because I have traveled on a train within the week past where I was informed by the men they had been in continuous service for fifty-three hours. With respect to cases in which the employees are allowed to be on trains for the time extended, emergency cases, such as those to which the Senator is now directing his attention, I will ask does not the Senator think it would be well to provide that for such extra service the employees should have additional compensation? I call his attention to that, as he is now preparing his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has been suggested, Mr. President—and I think the suggestion a good one—that if there could be imposed upon the railroad companies a requirement for extra pay, in excess of the regular pay, for the time men are compelled to work beyond a reasonable limit, it would be a most wholesome and effective provision against the overworking of men to their detriment and their danger and the great danger of the service.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the hour of 3 o'clock has been fixed, as I understand, by unanimous consent for a vote on the bill and all the amendments then pending. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that there are probably twenty or more amendments to be disposed of, and that, inasmuch as no debate will be permitted after the voting begins, it would seem quite wise to make some provision for debate on the amendments presented before 3 o'clock or pending now. I should like, therefore, to inquire if it would inconvenience the Senator should I make request for unanimous consent that we take up the amendments for debate under the five-minute rule at 1.15 o'clock, thus leaving an hour and three-quarters only for debate on twenty-odd amendments? I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's remarks, except to suggest the expediency and almost necessity of some such provision if the amendments individually are to receive any consideration at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, that I understood the same request to be made yesterday and the ruling to be made substantially that no variation of the unanimous-consent agreement which had been entered upon the record could be made. If I remember rightly, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] submitted such a query to the President, and there was such a ruling. I may be wrong about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so rule. On the contrary, the Chair ruled that, in his opinion, the unanimous-consent agreement could be modified by unanimous consent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I misunderstood the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, even in the absence of the rule suggested by the Chair I understand it to be a fact that no modification of the unanimous-consent agreement would obtain should the Senate agree to regulate the time for speeches prior to 3 o'clock. For instance, such agreement would in no wise operate to affect the unanimous-consent agreement any more than would the agreement frequently arranged for the interposition of the Brownsville debate interfere with the vote at 3 o'clock this afternoon. In other words, I think the Senate has complete control of its time and the disposition of the time up to 3 o'clock, but at that time the unanimous-consent agreement becomes imperatively operative under the usual usage of the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me for one moment I will conclude. In the light of the holding of the Chair on the subject, I renew my suggestion to the Senator as to the propriety of taking up the amendments under the five-minute rule in the very near future, because we have but very little time remaining.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have from time to time yielded the floor with the expectation that possibly some who had proposed amendments to the bill would have something to offer in support of their amendments. This bill has been the unfinished business during this entire session. At any time after 2 o'clock on any day any Senator who was interested in discussing or debating this bill, or who desired to say anything in support of any amendment offered to it, could readily have had the floor and the opportunity to do so.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I have observed that in all the debate which took place yesterday upon this bill—I will say nothing about my own participation in it—outside of the time when I occupied the floor, the debate was rather in criticism of the bill than in discussing any of the proposed and pending amendments. I have not felt called upon to say anything about these amendments until those who have proposed them and who are in favor of them advance reasons for their being adopted. I am unable to recall a single instance in which any Senator who had offered an amendment has taken the floor, either yesterday or to-day, to advance any reasons for the amendment offered.

I do not desire, Mr. President, to occupy the floor to the exclusion of anyone who desires to discuss proposed amendments. I shall have opportunity probably before 3 o'clock to say something, if I desire, in reply to what may be put forward concerning any of these amendments. I will yield the floor at this time to any Senator who rises to discuss any pending amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I again ask that we proceed to consider the bill and amendments under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] just this moment declined to agree to that request. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say, after having given the reasons why he could not agree to it, that even while he was on the floor he would yield to any Senator who wanted to say anything in behalf of any amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. I will withhold the request for unanimous consent for the time being, if the Senator from Colorado desires to speak.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], except that his request for unanimous consent does not go far enough. I believe, in order that the bill may be perfected intelligently, that the request for unanimous consent should include the voting upon amendments as they are offered and discussed. Unless that is done when 3 o'clock arrives there will be a mass of amendments offered, and there will be no opportunity for Senators who have not been following the discussion to understand the relations of the amendments to the bill and the effect of adopting or rejecting the amendments.

I submit, Mr. President, that there is nothing in the way of the unanimous-consent agreement going to the extent that I suggest. The language of the unanimous-consent agreement, as found on the Calendar, is as follows:

> It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, January 10, 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., the Senate will vote, without further debate, upon the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

It says nothing whatever about amendments. So that I take it that until 3 o'clock we would have the right, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to perfect the bill by amending it, so that at 3 o'clock the vote may be taken upon the amended bill. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Montana to amend his request for unanimous consent so that it will include the proposition that the amendments shall be voted upon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. After discussion.

Mr. PATTERSON. After discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I fear that the suggestion of the Senator would involve a violation of the existing unanimous-consent agreement. If the Senator will refer to the Calendar, upon which a statement of the unanimous-consent agreement appears, he will find it to read:

> It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, January 10, 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., the Senate will vote, without further debate, upon the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, together with all amendments pending or to be offered.

Under that unanimous-consent agreement the question arises whether we can begin by unanimous consent to vote upon and dispose of amendments prior to 3 o'clock. I doubt if that can be done without invading the unanimous-consent agreement. I would be perfectly willing to extend the request so as to include time for brief debate when an amendment is offered.

I recall an occasion during the last session of Congress, while we were operating under a similar unanimous-consent agreement, when Senators were estopped from the slightest explanation of either the necessity for or the effect of a proposed amendment at the time it was about to be voted upon. The embarrassment arising from that situation all Senators felt at the time. I believe there should be some slight opportunity for the Senator offering an amendment to explain its effect at the moment for at least five minutes. The debate might be limited to an explanation of the Senator proposing the amendment, so that it would not extend indefinitely five minutes for each Senator in the Chamber, as the general rule would permit.

Now, if it is agreeable to Senators, I should be glad to modify the request for unanimous consent so as to put it in this form: That at twenty minutes after 1 o'clock we proceed to debate the bill and the amendments under the five-minute rule until 3 o'clock and that the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore given be modified so that the Senator proposing an amendment may be permitted five minutes' time when it is about to be voted upon in which to explain its effect on the bill as it then stands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that both the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Colorado are correct, except I do not think the Senator from Montana is correct in supposing that we can not modify a unanimous-consent agreement by another unanimous-consent agreement. The Chair having just a moment ago ruled upon the subject, that of course any unanimous-consent agreement can be modified by another unanimous-consent agreement, it would be entirely competent for us to agree by unanimous consent to begin voting earlier, so far as that is concerned—that is, if everybody consented. But if we debate this question of unanimous consent very much longer, we shall have consumed golden moments which we need for the discussion of the amendments.

I will make a suggestion to the Senator, which I think he can get unanimous consent for, that beginning at half past 1 we take up the amendments as Senators may offer them, and debate them under what you may call the ten-minute rule, because there is no five-minute rule or ten-minute rule except as we make it——

Mr. PATTERSON. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the ten-minute rule, because some of the amendments can not be intelligently discussed in five minutes, while, on the contrary, the great number of them will not require much discussion. And after the conclusion of the debate on each amendment, we vote upon that amendment, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, and that we continue in that order until all amendments are disposed of, and that at that time we vote upon the bill without further debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. To-day?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; to-day.

Mr. CARTER. That would modify the existing unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; and it is competent for us to do that.

Mr. CARTER. I am perfectly agreeable to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that unanimous-consent agreement can be had; I do not know.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, it does not occur to me that unanimous consent can now be given that votes may be taken upon the amendments as they are discussed, because the original unanimous-consent agreement was a notice to all Senators that there would be no voting until 3 o'clock, and then it would be upon the bill and the pending amendments and the amendments then offered. So that those Senators who are absent from the Senate are entitled to the advantage of that unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course I instantly see the force of that suggestion, but I had understood the Chair to hold only a moment ago that any unanimous-consent agreement might, of course, be modified by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair. The considerations advanced by the Senator from Maine would, in the opinion of the Chair, warrant objection by any Senator to a subsequent modification of a unanimous-consent agreement by unanimous consent; but they do not affect the question of power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That would amount, then, merely to a question, as a practical matter, whether the consideration suggested by the Senator from Maine is weighty enough in the mind of any Senator to cause him to object to the request for unanimous consent. I think the unanimous-consent agreement which I have suggested can be secured, if it is competent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me the point made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is one that is perfectly unanswerable. We make an agreement to begin to vote on a bill and amendments at 3 o'clock. That is notice to the Senate that there will be no voting before that time. There may be many Senators desirous of voting on this bill who are not present. It seems to me an obvious violation of the unanimous-consent agreement to begin to vote before 3 o'clock. If an objection is necessary, I shall most assuredly make it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In view of the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested that he will make objection, it is not necessary to ask for a formal ruling of the Chair. I therefore ask for this modification of the unanimous-consent agreement, because the considerations advanced by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Montana are unanswerable. We can not vote upon the amendments intelligently unless we hear them discussed immediately before they are voted on. I ask for this modification of the unanimous-consent agreement—that beginning at 3 o'clock we shall first take up the amendments in the order in which they may be offered by Senators, and that then we shall debate each one of those amendments under the five-minute rule and vote on each one separately after the debate upon each shall have been concluded. I ask for that modification of the unanimous-consent agreement—beginning at 3 o'clock. That answers the objection made by the Senator from Maine.

I call attention, further, to the fact that without this modification there would be not more than two or three Senators, who have been giving very special attention to this bill, who could possibly vote understandingly on hardly any of the amendments. I ask for that unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks that the unanimous-consent agreement be modified so that beginning with 3 o'clock——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments offered and to be offered to the pending bill be taken up and debated under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of the debate the amendments be voted upon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Each amendment; that is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Each amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana what he means by each amendment being debated under the five-minute rule?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I mean this: As each Senator offers his amendment any Senator will be entitled to discuss the amendment for five minutes, until every Senator who desires to do so shall have discussed it, and at the end of the discussion, no Senator being permitted to speak more than once, the amendment be voted upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a sufficient answer. There are about forty amendments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And each amendment is to be debated under the five-minute rule at the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is obvious that under such an arrangement we would stay here all night, to say the least, and I object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator from New Hampshire objects, I should like to have the opportunity of trying to persuade the Senator by an observation or two. Of course, if it is hopeless to try to persuade the Senator, I will not attempt it.

But I offer this suggestion: While there are some forty or forty-one or forty-two amendments, it is perfectly obvious that the majority of them will not be debated at all, and upon those that are debated not more than three or four Senators would speak. But even if what the Senator from New Hampshire states is true, that we might stay here until a late hour at night——

Mr. GALLINGER. All night.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This bill is of more importance than the convenience of Senators; but if the Senator objects, that settles it.

Mr GALLINGER. I will say that if any modification of the unanimous-consent agreement should be reached the modification ought to be to recommit the bill to the committee. That is what ought to be done. It is manifestly in such shape now that if we directly vote upon it or amuse ourselves by five-minute speeches on it we will have a bill that nobody will be satisfied with when we come to vote on it. That is my sincere conviction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether, if the Senator from Massachusetts, on reconsideration, were willing to withdraw his objection to the first unanimous-consent request (I mean as modified by the Senator from Montana—that is to say, that at half past 1 or at any other time we take up the amendments and discuss them and vote on them), he would agree to it?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Massachusetts can answer for himself.

Mr. LODGE. I do not put my objection on any special ground about the time to be consumed or even on the point I made before as to the notice given to Senators. Unanimous-consent agreements in the Senate must be observed. If they are not, they will come to an end. If it is to be supposed that unanimous-consent agreements are to be modified, we shall soon find it impossible to get a unanimous-consent agreement. I think nothing is more important than the rigidity with which the Senate preserves unanimous-consent agreements. It is absolutely necessary to the transaction and conclusion of business. I do not think we ought to undertake to modify a unanimous-consent agreement if it can possibly be avoided, and I certainly do not think we ought to modify it in such a way as to bring on a vote before the time set. That, it seems to me, is in absolute violation of the agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say in answer, taking just a moment, because I do not propose to occupy more of the time of the Senate, that I recognize the very great weight of what the Senator from Massachusetts has said; and if that rule is going to be maintained until it shall become a law of procedure in the Senate, it might as well be understood by all of us that hereafter when we make a unanimous-consent agreement about voting it must be understood that that agreement is not going to be changed by any subsequent agreement.

Mr. FRYE. It never has been.

Mr BEVERIDGE. It is well for all of us to understand that hereafter a unanimous-consent agreement becomes a law of the body. I recognize the great weight of what the Senator from Massachusetts has said.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have never known a unanimous-consent agreement to be changed in the slightest degree. It seems to me the moment we commence changing, that moment the custom is practically of no value whatever.

It is quite obvious that this bill is not in proper condition to become a law. Nobody knows what it will be when we shall have passed upon the amendments. It is very doubtful whether, after we have got through amending it, it will be such a bill as we ought to pass. It is an important bill. I want to vote for the principle. I want, in some way, if possible, to compel the railroad companies to not overwork their men, and at the same time I do not want to do anything that will interfere with the proper discharge of the duties which the railroad companies owe to the public. I supposed I would be able to vote for this bill, but I misunderstood the present condition of the bill. I may be able to vote for it when the amendments shall have been disposed of. I may conclude that I ought to vote against the bill. I desire to say that if I do, I am going to vote against it because it is not a bill suitable, in my judgment, to carry out the purpose intended by the bill.

Mr. President, this bill ought to have been taken up and there ought to have been no unanimous consent in connection with it that no vote should be taken upon any amendment prior to 3 o'clock. The unanimous-consent agreement ought to have been confined to the perfected bill. We ought to have had an opportunity before that time to vote on the amendments. Such ought to have been the agreement, but it is not the agreement. The agreement should have been submitted in that way—that we might vote on the amendments as they came up and at 3 o'clock make final disposition of the bill. There is no trouble about the rule if it is properly applied.

I have said this merely because it looks to me as if I shall have to vote against the bill as it now stands. I desire the public to know, and I want the RECORD to show that, so far as voting against the bill is concerned, I do not vote against it because I am opposed to the principle, but because I do not believe the bill has had proper consideration in order to carry out the purpose which, on its face, it purports to intend.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber a moment ago when an effort was being made to arrive at some workable rule here. It appears to me a very absurd idea, which I caught as I came in, that the Senate can not modify a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It can.

Mr. TILLMAN. It can?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no question about it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Unless we can change a foolish custom or habit or rule, if we have agreed to one, we had better quit business. We will not be doing business in a decent or proper manner if the Senator proposing an amendment to an important measure is deprived of the opportunity to explain what he wants to do, and other Senators are deprived of the opportunity of showing where the amendment is wrong, and we are thus denied the opportunity to vote intelligently. Otherwise we will kill all these amendments, some of them good and some of them bad, without any intelligent understanding of what we are doing or why we are doing it.

I can not conceive that any Senator here will object to our now taking up the amendments and proceeding to their disposition, of course calling the roll of the Senate, so as to give every Senator notice to be on hand to vote on the amendments if he desires.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected to that very request.

Mr. TILLMAN. He did?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wish to inquire if the Senator from South Carolina thinks there is any rule against discussing the amendments which have been offered?

Mr. TILLMAN. But why not vote on an amendment when it shall have been discussed?

Mr. CULLOM. Because the unanimous-consent agreement does not allow it. That is the only reason.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senate can change the unanimous-consent agreement if it sees fit.

Mr. CULLOM. Let Senators proceed to discuss the bill and amendments, and the time will come when we will vote on them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the permission of the Chair, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that precise request was made, and objection was interposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no question of the power of the Senate to change it, as a matter of power, but as the Chair has put it, it is not a question of power. The power exists. It is a question whether the considerations presented by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts have, in the mind of any Senator, sufficient weight to cause him to make an objection. In this instance it did with two Senators—the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts. There is where we stand.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, we have made a foolish agreement, and two Senators object to changing it.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection on the part of anybody to a Senator discussing these amendments if he wants to make a speech on them, and we will vote on them when the time comes.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is an agreement which is binding merely on the honor of the Senate. If I choose at 3 o'clock to take the floor on this bill and speak for three hours there can be no complaint, except that I have violated an old and ancient custom here. I could not be brought before the Senate and accused of any official impropriety. But in the many years I have been here I have never known anybody to violate a unanimous-consent agreement, although I have known Senators to come on the floor and say, "If I had been present the agreement would not have been made; but having been made, I will stand by it." I have heard Senators say they did not think the construction put upon an agreement by the Chair was correct, and yet I have never known a Senator to refuse to adhere to the ruling. The moment you begin to modify these agreements there will be an end to them. If we make an improper agreement, there is always a way to get out of it. You can defeat the bill. You can vote against the bill. You can reconsider it and reinstate it. There is a way in which it can be done if it becomes absolutely necessary.

Mr. President, this bill is not going to become a law at the present session of Congress. Everybody knows that. It is not now in proper form, in my judgment, and I doubt whether in the hour and a half that we have left before we must vote there will be opportunity to debate it sufficiently and intelligently enough to put it in form. The friend of the bill is the one who always asks unanimous consent to make it the order of business and to fix a time for a vote. If the friends of the bill are not sufficiently alert to want to complete and perfect the bill before voting, they are the people who ought to take the responsibility of it. Had I been present and had my attention been called to the request, I should have insisted that we should be allowed to vote on the various amendments before the hour fixed for the general vote. That is the orderly and proper way. That is what ought to have been done and can always be done, and it saves any question such as now arises.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is there any request for unanimous consent pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No request is pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would it be in order at 3 o'clock, when, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we are to proceed to vote, when every Senator who agreed to the previous unanimous-consent arrangement has had an opportunity to be present, to modify the unanimous-consent agreement so that debate may be permitted?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that that is precisely the request which has already been made and which was objected to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not make the request. I asked the Chair if it would be in order to make the request at 3 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, it would be the duty of the Chair to submit such a request to the judgment of the Senate. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senate possesses the power to modify by unanimous consent a unanimous-consent agreement. It is merely a question of policy whether or not the Senate will modify its unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, I will——

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I believe I have the floor, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, referring to the amendment I proposed last evening, on page 2 there is a provision—

That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, knowingly violating any of the provisions of this act, or any employee who by any false representation or concealment of fact procures himself to be employed in violation of the provisions of this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

That was put in the bill on the theory that if the laboring over a certain number of hours was to be a misdemeanor, both the employer and the laborer ought to be subject to the same or similar penalties. But on looking over the bill, which is modeled largely upon the bill that the committee reported, it seems to me that the theory of the bill is that it is a bill to prevent common carriers from employing their help more than a certain number of hours, and that the provision which puts a penalty upon the employee is not properly in the bill or according to the theory of the bill. Therefore I desire to modify my amendment by striking out the language stricken out with pen and ink in the copy which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut proposes a modification of his amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, in line 18, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out—or any employee who by any false representation or concealment of fact procures himself to be employed in violation of the provisions of this act.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I think the valuable time that has been taken up in the discussion of the proposition to modify the unanimous-consent agreement has, after all, been very well spent, because it is now brought to our attention that from custom it has become a practical law that when a unanimous-consent agreement to vote has once been made it can not thereafter be modified.

That being true, I wish to give notice that, so far as I am concerned, when I am present in the Senate Chamber hereafter I shall object to any proposed unanimous-consent agreement for the modification of a unanimous-consent agreement, so that hereafter when a unanimous-consent agreement is asked it can be fixed in proper terms.

I wish to call attention to the fact that there is nothing whatever right now to prevent any Senator who has an amendment to this bill from speaking to his amendment immediately.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments to this bill, allowing each Senator to speak not more than five minutes upon any amendment, and no vote to be taken upon any amendment until after 3 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is plainly out of order. It is a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. TELLER and others. No; it is not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. I insist that it does not modify the unanimous-consent agreement. The unanimous-consent agreement is that we shall proceed at 3 o'clock to vote upon the amendments and upon the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion now is that we divide the time, on the basis of five minutes, allowing each Senator five minutes to discuss any amendment that may be offered up until 3 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is an admirable motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. So as to give every Senator an opportunity at least to explain any amendment he may offer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator from North Dakota. I think it is an admirable motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota please restate his motion?

Mr. McCUMBER. Before making the motion, I am going to ask for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments to this bill, allowing each Senator to debate an amendment not longer than five minutes, no vote to be taken upon any amendment until after 3 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Precisely that request was made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] half an hour ago, and it was objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments to the pending bill, the debate thereon to proceed under the five-minute rule, and that no vote upon any amendment be taken until after 3 o'clock.

Mr. SPOONER. The latter part of that is covered by the unanimous-consent agreement. It could not be changed by motion. I suggest to the Senator that he omit the latter part of his motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is asking unanimous consent; he is not making a motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand, but he is asking that we proceed under the five-minute rule, and that no vote be taken on the amendments until 3 o'clock. The latter part of it is covered by the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am in favor of it, but that is precisely the request made by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. My request was that we proceed under the five-minute rule until 3 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was the request, and it was objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota to modify his motion in this respect, that the time be divided between those who are in favor of a given amendment and those who are opposed to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not see how it would be possible to divide the time, because I suppose there may be many amendments to which there will be no objection, and there may be other amendments where all the remarks will be on one side, in opposition to the amendment, very few supporting it. I think we will get the matter——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There will be no disposition on either side to occupy time if there is no occasion for it. But where a large number of amendments have been proposed to a bill and have been pending for weeks, and no debate had in favor of those amendments until we draw on to the time of voting on the bill—within an hour and a half of the time when we are to vote upon it—if those who are in favor of the various amendments which have been offered choose to occupy all the time they can do so, to the exclusion of speeches in opposition to an amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think any Senator or any number of Senators would abuse the privilege of the five-minute rule. I think they would all have an interest in the amendment and would confine their arguments so that the time would be practically divided among all the amendments. I do not think there is any occasion for fear in that respect. I hope the Senate will agree to the request.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he not think that, after all, the amendments might receive their better proportion of attention, according to their importance, by any Senator rising now and speaking on his amendment without the agreement for which the Senator asks?

Mr. McCUMBER. Any Senator can take up the whole time now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not object to the Senator's request. I was very much in favor of it in the first place and was surprised when it was objected to. But I do not think any Senator would take up the full time or half the time or a sixteenth of the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. If he took up a half of it or a quarter of it it would destroy the opportunity to discuss fully the amendments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are forty amendments, as the Senator from New Hampshire pointed out, and if each Senator debated for five minutes the discussion could not be concluded within the next hour and a quarter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire rises to a parliamentary inquiry. He will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The unanimous-consent agreement is "that on Thursday, January 10, 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., the Senate will vote, without further debate, upon the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, together with all amendments pending or to be offered."

I desire to ask the Chair whether it would be competent, under that agreement, at the proper time to make a motion to recommit the bill?

I will venture to make one observation merely, if the Chair will pardon me.

Mr. President, it seems to me—although I anticipate the ruling—that a motion to recommit is a vote upon the bill and the amendments; that it is a disposition of them for the time being. But I await the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota will state his point of order.

Mr. NELSON. This is resorting to a practice, which has prevailed in the House of Representatives for a long time, of asking what are called "parliamentary questions." I do not think that practice has ever prevailed in the Senate, nor ought we to attempt to have any such practice. The Presiding Officer of the Senate ought not to be required to rule on a question in advance of the time when it legitimately comes up for decision. I do not think we ought to institute a practice of this kind, requiring the President of the Senate to pronounce an opinion on what for the time being is purely an academic question and not a practical question for immediate decision.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not purely an academic question; it is a legislative question, a question of procedure. The decision of the Chair on this question might decide my action in other directions. I submit to the Senator from Minnesota that he has not been as diligent in this matter as he usually is if he does not recall a great many instances in which parliamentary inquiries have been directed to the Chair and courteously answered.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado rise to the question raised by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes. I was going to suggest that I know of no more complete repudiation of the unanimous-consent rule than would be the submission of a motion to recommit, when by a vote of the majority of the Senate it would be utterly impossible to vote at the time fixed for voting. By uanimous consent we were to commence voting at 3 o'clock on the bill and amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. Which we will do.

Mr. PATTERSON. Every argument that I have heard by those who object to any amendment of the unanimous-consent agreement which was adopted has been that it would be like invading the holy of holies to change the unanimous-consent rule, even to the extent of the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t. Under those circumstances, it seems to me that no motion would be in order that would take from the Senate the right to proceed under the rule which was adopted. I therefore suggest to the Chair that such a motion should not be entertained.

Mr. NELSON. I wish only to say that in the shape in which this question stands the Presiding Officer could not well rule on the question now, because the bill comes to a vote at 3 o'clock by unanimous consent. That is the status of the bill. We have agreed to vote upon the bill and pending amendments at 3 o'clock under the unanimous-consent arrangement. If at that time a motion is made to recommit, it would be subject to the ordinary parliamentary rule, and it would be for the Chair to say whether it was a departure from the unanimous-consent agreement or whether it was in the scope of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that a motion to recommit under the circumstances suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire would be a violation of the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement already made. The agreement is that "at 3 o'clock p. m. the Senate will vote upon the bill, together with all amendments pending or to be offered." This clearly contemplates a final disposition of the measure. Obviously a recommittal would be inconsistent with such final disposition.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I present an amendment which will be noted, as I send a memorandum of it to the desk.

In line 1, page 4, I move to strike out the word "consecutive" before the word "hours," and after the word "hours" to insert the words, "during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours;" and in line 4, page 4, after the word "duty," to insert the words "who has been in service sixteen hours during twenty-six consecutive hours;" so that the bill as thus amended would read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty more than sixteen hours during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee to go on duty who has been in service sixteen hours during twenty-six consecutive hours without having had at least ten hours for rest.

Mr. President, I think the amendment cures the defect in the bill made apparent by the lucid argument of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] yesterday afternoon. The bill as presented and as we were urged to pass it at the last session would, according to reasonable construction, regardless of what any State law may be, have permitted the employment of men for substantially thirty-odd consecutive hours. This amendment will require ten hours of rest during every twenty-six consecutive hours, and I think in that it responds to the desire and intent of those favoring this legislation.

As suggested by the Senator from Colorado yesterday, under the bill as it stood the man who had worked sixteen consecutive hours would become entitled to ten hours' rest, and the company would be obligated to see that he obtained it; but if he had worked fifteen and a half hours he would not be entitled to any rest at the expiration of that time, but could again be sent out upon a trip and continued for fifteen and a half hours longer, or fifteen hours and fifty-nine minutes doubled in each period of service, if you wish to make it apply to the uttermost extreme.

I think there is not within this Chamber, nor was there in the Chamber during the last session, a single Senator who did not feel that a law should be passed limiting the hours of consecutive employment by persons engaged in the movement of railway trains. There is not a Senator in this Chamber who did not feel that it was and is now, if you please, the duty of Congress to do whatsoever it may in a constitutional manner to lessen the great and deplorable loss of life of passengers and railway operatives connected with the operation of trains. But, Mr. President, in making the provision I think it was and now is the commendable desire of all to guard this legislation in such a manner that it will accomplish the purpose intended to be accomplished without needlessly and ruthlessly interfering with the stupendous business operations of the country.

We were seriously chided during the last session for desiring some time to look the bill over. It was reported here on the 9th of June. There was no motion made to take it up until the 26th of June. We adjourned on the 30th day of June in conformity with the provisions of a concurrent resolution. Thus we had four days, and all Senators will clearly recall the busy time during the last days of the session. The great appropriation bills, imperatively requiring disposition, had to be disposed of during those four days.

Now, Mr. President, in perfect good faith, in common with other Senators on this floor, I objected to the consideration of this bill in the limited time then at our disposal. I objected because the bill required careful consideration, and, moreover, because in the nature of things it was known that whatsoever the Senate might hastily do, the bill could not become a law during that session of Congress. The discovery within the brief period of the present debate that the bill was fatally defective, the admission that the Senator advocating its passage had not written it and did not know what it contained, seems to be quite sufficient to justify those who objected to its hasty consideration during the closing hours of the last session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I have only one word more. I am in favor of the bill, but it must be perfected before I can vote for it—that is, made as near perfect as fair consideration and proper amendments can make it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill. I shall do so, however, with some doubt as to whether it will accomplish the purpose for which it is intended. I entertain this doubt in consequence of some inquiries which I made during last summer and fall of the men who operate railroad trains. I did not find any great amount of enthusiasm among the train men with whom I talked in behalf of the bill as it stood at that time. I did find, however, a strong desire on the part of some of the older engineers and conductors with whom I talked in favor of a provision in the bill which would make unlawful the movement of trains containing tonnage in excess of the registered capacity of the engines hauling such trains. It may not be generally known that all locomotives are registered as to their capacity in point of power by their makers.

It seemed to me to be such a valuable suggestion that I have formulated and offered an amendment, and at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to vote upon it. I offered the amendment yesterday and Senators will find it in print. When the time comes to offer it to the bill, however, I shall propose some modifications. With the permission of the Senate, I will read the amendment as I shall propose it then:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any interstate railway to move any train or trains carrying commodities entering into interstate commerce containing tonnage in excess of the registered capacity of the engine or engines attached thereto. Any officer, agent, or employee of any such railway who violates the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 for each offense.

Mr. President, the men with whom I conferred on this question told me that if they were allowed to proceed with their trains without having those trains overloaded they would be able to reach their destination without delay and on schedule time. For instance, a man starts from an initial point with a train.

When he gets out two or three stations he is ordered to attach five, ten, or twenty additional cars, and thus he acquires a greater amount of tonnage than the engine he is in charge of can haul. So he is delayed, and getting behind time he is forced to get upon a side track in order to let some other train go by, and so a large number of freight trains passing over the line are thus delayed, to the detriment of the traffic of the entire road.

The engineers and conductors with whom I talked tell me that if we limit the tonnage of the train to the capacity of the engine one-half of the difficulties which are arising to-day, and out of which questions of car shortage and coal supply come, will be avoided.

So, Mr. President, I think the adoption of this amendment will go further toward accomplishing the purpose of the friends of the bill, and I am one of them, than the bill itself. I believe it is a very essential amendment and should be adopted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the amendment that I offered last night is proposed as a substitute for the bill, and I should like to have it read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain in service more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having had at least ten hours for rest.

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is conducted, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is affected, to remain in service more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such common carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having had at least ten hours for rest.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, knowingly violating any of the provisions of this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred, but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to employers operating wreck or relief trains.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The proposed amendment follows the form of the bill as reported by the committee, and, as one of the members of the committee who reported the bill, I desire to say that I do not in any way wish to interfere with the passage of a proper bill upon this subject. On the contrary, I desire to assist in every possible way to that end.

But the bill as reported by the committee, as stated by the chairman [Mr. DOLLIVER] yesterday, was not considered very exhaustively nor at great length. Nor were there any witnesses before the committee, but simply the statement that a similar bill has been reported favorably by the House committee and the representations of the gentlemen who appeared in behalf of the brotherhood of trainmen. The bill became so encumbered with the various amendments printed in it that I thought it would be wise to make a clean, new draft of a bill, so that it might be considered as a whole and be coherent.

I like the provision in the amendment that I have offered, on the first page and in the first section, which defines what kind of an exception may justify a railroad company in employing a man sometimes over the sixteen hours. The exception, as there defined, is that "on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such carrier" could not have been avoided.

The reason why I like that in preference to the language of the bill as reported by the committee, which simply used the words "casualty occurring after the train had started," is that, in my judgment, the word "casualty" is not as susceptible of a concise, well-known, legal meaning as the words "reasonable care." I believe that the reasonable care required on the part of the carrier has been repeatedly defined by the courts in the case of passenger transportation to be the highest degree of care, and it would be so considered by the courts in a case where the company were claiming that it was a proper kind of emergency to exempt them from the operations of the law and the Government official was claiming that it was not.

Secondly, I do not like the provision in the committeee bill, or at least the proposed amendment of the committee, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to employ whatever number of inspectors it has a mind to employ and incur whatever expense it has a mind to incur in the enforcement of the law. I believe if it is the duty of the Commission to enforce the provisions of the act where complaint is made to them, every railroad employee will be an informer against the company in case of any violation of the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], one of whom introduced the original bill and the other of whom, from the same committee, introduced a substitute. It seems to me that the substitute more nearly meets the requirement without injury to the traffic of the country than any amendments which have been proposed to the original bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Which substitute does the Senator speak of?

Mr. McCUMBER. The substitute of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. But I desire to call the attention of both Senators to a condition which, I think, their bill or substitute does not fully meet. I have here prepared a section of about 200 miles of railway on one line running through my State. It is a transcontinental line. There are just an even twelve feeders running from the line, about 15 to 18 miles apart, to the Canadian border. Each one of those is from 50 to 80 miles in length and each one of those lines has one passenger train daily. The crew either start at the end of the line, go down to the connecting point and return the same day, or they start at the connecting point, go to the end of the line and return the same day. This gives daily one passenger service.

Now, as this is a through line, every one of those trains is run with the idea of making connections both with the eastern and the western lines; and inasmuch as the run is only from 40 to 80 miles, usually there is but little time taken in the actual run, but considerable time is necessary sometimes to wait for the eastern train or for the western train. Even under ordinary conditions they must wait a few hours. So the actual services under ordinary conditions requires but four or five or six or eight hours of run daily, and there is but one crew to make the run back and forth.

Now, Mr. President, we will say that we start at one of these points at the end with a crew which should leave at 6 o'clock and return at 6 o'clock in the evening. They get down to the connection and they must wait five hours, possibly, for a train coming from the east to make connections, and then they go back again. That would take them seventeen hours, or an hour more than the regular time, and they would have to leave again in seven hours. If they got in at 11 o'clock and left at 6, they would leave in seven hours instead of having eight or ten hours' delay, and yet the time has actually been put in.

Take the conditions of the roads at the present time. There are blizzards almost every day. But outside of that, these trains coming East and West have to meet other trains at St. Paul and other large cities, and make connection with the mail trains.

There are hundreds of causes for delay irrespective of casualty. For instance, waiting for a train to which you are to connect which is itself behind is not a casualty. Necessarily the crews will have to either stop running their train when they get back at the end and wait twenty-four hours, keeping the people, who will not know whether they will get back or not, waiting in the several depots twenty-four hours to ascertain whether or not they can go on to their destination.

The amendment which I have prepared simply adds after the word "hours," in line 8 of the substitute, these words:

Except, when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

That would cover a dozen cases and cases that are occurring almost daily.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Can the Senator suggest where, if the substitute be not adopted, he would put that same amendment into the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. At the proper place. I do not know where it is. I will try to find it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am for the amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want only a moment. I have numerous letters, telegrams, and petitions in respect to the pending bill which I have been trying to find an opportunity to present. There is not time now to have them read, but I send them to the desk in order that they may be filed as petitions with respect to this matter.

The petitions and memorials were ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Petitions of Joppa Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Toledo; of Local Division, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Painesville, and of Lake Shore Lodge, No. 84, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Ashtabula, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called "sixteen-hour bill."

Memorials of sundry citizens of Cambridge, Crestline, Columbus, Lancaster, Cleveland, Alliance, of Local Division, No. 218, Order of Railway Conductors, of Dennison, all in the State of Ohio; of the assistant general manager of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, of St. Louis, Mo., and of sundry conductors, engineers, firemen, and brakemen employed on the Pittsburg division of the southwest system of the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg, all of Pittsburg, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "sixteen-hour bill."

Mr. FORAKER. Now, having the floor, I want to give notice that I shall not offer the amendment which I gave notice at the last session I would offer at the proper time. It is the amendment to be found near the top of page 6 of the bill as printed with the amendments, the one which provides that if an employee should by false representations procure himself to be employed longer than sixteen consecutive hours he should be liable to a penalty. Since I gave that notice I have investigated the matter, and I have come to the conclusion as a result of it that the system of keeping an account of the employment of men is such upon all properly managed railroads that there is no danger of any such imposition as that; and therefore I shall not offer the amendment. I give this notice so that if any other Senator wants to offer it he may do it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, in common with other Senators I am extremely anxious that this bill should pass, but not less anxious that it should be perfected and the defects in it which are pointed out corrected by appropriate amendment.

I desire to say that I recognize fully the force of the suggestions made yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] in respect to the phraseology in which those excessive hours of labor are prohibited, both in the bill which was reported from the committee and in the substitute which I suggested the possibility of my offering upon the floor of the Senate. It is obviously, whether it be a practical question or not, within a reasonable interpretation of the language of the bill possible to figure out that instead of prohibiting excessive hours of labor the language may be so construed as literally to authorize it. So I desire the Senate to understand that I fully appreciate the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] modifying the phraseology as he suggested in the amendment which, I believe, he offered, and that so far as I am concerned, and I think so far as the committee is concerned, it is our desire that this language be changed as suggested by the Senator from Montana, or in some other way to fully meet the lucid criticism of the phraseology contained in the remarks made yesterday by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer, and ask to have read at this time, what I shall propose as a substitute to the bill now under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the Secretary will read the substitute now proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours for rest; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four hour period to continue on duty or to go on duty without having had at least eight hours for rest within such twenty-four hour period.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier or any of its officers or agents violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each and every violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of such violations as may come to its knowledge.

That to enable the Commission to execute and enforce the provisions of this act it shall have the power to employ such inspectors or other persons as may be necessary. To enforce the provisions of this act the Commission and its agents or employees thereunto duly authorized by order of said Commission shall have the power to administer oaths, interrogate witnesses, take testimony, and require the production of books and papers. The Commission may also order depositions taken before any officer in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia qualified by law to take the same.

The provisions of this act shall not apply to relief or wreck trains.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PILES. I ask that the first section of the proposed substitute may be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks that the first section of the proposed substitute of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] be again read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest, if it is not disagreeable to anyone, that the entire substitute be again read. Though I listened attentively, I could not hear it all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana requests the rereading of the entire substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. If there is no objection, it will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed substitute of Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I now ask to have read the amendment which I offer, to come in at the end of the first section of the proposed substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first section of Mr. LA FOLLETTE's substitute it is proposed to insert the following words:

The extra time served by any employee on account of an emergency, as heretofore provided, shall be paid for by the carrier in addition to the compensation of the employee for regular service. The rate of compensation for extra service shall, in proportion to the time consumed thereby, be not less than the compensation for regular service.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I think that this is a wise provision for two reasons. The first is that it is just to the employee. When he has performed to the last degree the legitimate, legal service for which he was employed, and when by an emergency he has been constrained into an additional service, it is but right and just to him that he should receive additional compensation therefor. Second, to have the carrier understand that, in the event of casualties or emergencies such as are provided for in this act, it will entail upon him additional expense, and that he would have to pay the bill of labor rendered necessary thereby, is a wholesome and expedient regulation to keep him always notified and upon warning to prevent the occasion for such casualties or emergencies.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to present at this time an amendment, which I shall offer at the proper time and which I ask may now be read. Then I shall have a few words to say in reference to it. I intend to offer the amendment to which ever one of these measures may be finally agreed upon by the Senate, whether it be the original bill or the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any railroad company the railroad of which lies wholly within the limits of one State.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, conceding the importance of the end sought to be accomplished—and no one is more fully in accord with the desire to accomplish the end than I am—to wit, the prevention of the employment of operatives upon railroads for lengths of time which may be either burdensome to themselves or unsafe to the public—conceding that, at the same time I am strongly of the opinion that this legislation can not be constitutionally applied to a railroad which lies wholly within the limits of a State. I can not, of course, go into the constitutional argument at this time. I simply desire to say that I think not only that it is the particular province of each State to determine these matters for itself in the case of a road that lies within its own borders, but that each State is entirely competent to do so. Speaking for my own State, I am satisfied that the legislature of the State will apply the proper remedy whenever it is shown that there is a necessity for remedy in the operation of trains upon railroads which lie altogether within the State; and I am not willing that this province of the State of Georgia should be invaded and taken away by national legislation. I do not think that there is any power in the General Government to do so.

For that reason I most earnestly favor the adoption of this amendment. I trust the Senate will agree with me that provision may be incorporated in such bill as may be finally agreed upon by the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, without elaborating that, I avail myself of the opportunity, in the few minutes that are left to me, to say that I think this bill is before the Senate in an extremely unsatisfactory and unfortunate position. The Senate, Mr. President, has committees for the purpose of perfecting legislation in order that the Senate may act advisedly, largely influenced by the judgment of the committee. How stands this measure before the Senate? The committee reports the bill before us, which is itself absolutely plastered with amendments, upon which we are called to act. The committee, however, may not be responsible for that, because it can not prevent other Senators from offering amendments.

But that is not the serious condition to which I want to call the attention of the Senate. Since this bill has been reported to the Senate, during the last hour of its consideration and just before we are called upon to determine the question of its passage, we have presented to us by three members of the committee—and the three members who are the active representatives of the committee before the Senate—three separate substitutes, one by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], one by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and one by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], each of them a separate substantive proposition. We are called upon to decide now which one of these we will adopt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I sympathize with the general purpose of this bill, and, so far as I may be able, I intend to support the principle it involves. I want to call attention, however, to a provision in section 1 of the proposed substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. After the language affecting the Territories and the District of Columbia it is provided:

Or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents—to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty, etc.

Following, then, with the prohibition or the requirement—

Now, Mr. President, take, for instance, the State of Texas. There is not, I venture to say, a railroad in that State, the termini of which lie wholly within the limits of the State, but is engaged to a degree in interstate commerce; yet the provisions of the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin propose to regulate the hours of labor of employees not alone in connection with interstate shipments of freight or the transportation of passengers from Texas out of it into other States or Territories or foreign countries, but it prohibits a railway company from requiring or permitting any employee "engaged in or connected with the movement of any train" to labor longer than the specified time. So that, as clear as the English language can make it, this provision undertakes to regulate the movement of trains wholly within the limits of a State, whereas the authority of Congress is limited to the regulation of interstate transportation of passengers and freight or transportation into foreign countries. Unless the Senator from Wisconsin will accept such an amendment as is proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], some of us, although we sympathize with the general purpose which he has in view—reaching the safety of passengers as well as employees engaged in interstate commerce—it will be difficult for us to support such a measure.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Would not the passage by Congress of an act that undertook to regulate commerce entirely within the limits of a State be unconstitutional, and would not the Supreme Court so declare?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so. I am very sure, Mr. President, it would, but it would endanger——

Mr. TILLMAN. Therefore, the passage of such a law here would be an absurdity upon our part.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so; but it would endanger the validity of the entire bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. We would simply be making asses of ourselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, to make myself more plainly understood, if I can, I want to repeat that there is scarcely an intrastate railroad in the United States but what is also engaged in interstate commerce. We may regulate the movement of interstate freight on those roads, but our power stops there. We can no more regulate the movement of intrastate freight by local companies than we can regulate the movement of intrastate freight by Federal corporations, such as the Texas and Pacific Railway Company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I offer an amendment?

Mr. KEAN. Let the Secretary read it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, in line 10, after the word "train," it is proposed to insert "carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I think the proposition in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], as well as the remarks made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], were in advance completely answered yesterday by the singularly lucid remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. Nor do I think, Mr. President, that the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court upon this particular subject leave this question open to further dispute. Where a railroad is altogether within the limits of a State and still carries interstate commerce it becomes an agency of interstate commerce, and as such is within the plenary power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce and all of its agencies. The reason of this becomes apparent when we consider, for example, the law concerning automatic couplers. If a State road takes cars from an interstate road to transport them from one State to within the limits of that State or beyond it, it is as much an instrument of interstate commerce as if the railroad rails themselves extended beyond the borders of the State. Both Senators are very well familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this point which, from the beginning, even before the decision in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden down to the present time, have repeatedly and increasingly held this to be the case.

I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to a decision with which he must be particularly familiar, and which entirely answers his whole contention. It is the decision in the case of "The Daniel Ball" (10 Wallace), where it was distinctly held, not by obiter dicta, but in deciding the case, that where the boat never left the waters of the State, yet if occasionally it carried interstate commerce, it became an instrument of interstate commerce, and as such subject to the absolute power of Congress; or to the stronger case of "The Montello" (20 Wallace), a Wisconsin case, the argument in which, perhaps, was participated in by the distinguished senior Senator from that State [Mr. SPOONER], where it was held that a boat which traversed not State rivers only but State canals made by the State itself, and which never left the State, but which at times carried interstate commerce, was nevertheless an instrument of interstate commerce, and as such subject to the regulations of Congress, although the boat never left the limits of the State.

However, it must be perfectly apparent, Mr. President, that no such decisions are required to demonstrate, not only the reasonableness, but the necessity of this rule, because if articles of commerce, or passengers, or anything else which enter into commerce, are transported beyond the limits of one State to another, no matter whether by a railroad whose railroad iron crossed the boundaries or whether by a railroad which stopped at the State line, nevertheless the commerce goes over the State just the same, and that fact, and not the fact of the iron extending across the State boundaries, is what makes them an instrument of interstate commerce.

Further, I call the attention of both Senators to the fact that it has been held from the beginning that a boat which never leaves the waters of the State, but merely meets boats that do pass in and out of the waters of the State, must observe the signals required by Congress, although they never carry any interstate commerce at all, merely because the meeting of boats that do carry interstate commerce, if they do not observe the signals required by Congress, would be to put interstate commerce in danger.

Mr. President, it seems to me that these direct decisions, which have been repeatedly held from the beginning, answer the contentions advanced by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Texas.

As to the practical question, I have not been able to see, nor have I heard it suggested, what danger or injury can come from this measure of safety. The Senator from Georgia, in offering his amendment, does not offer any practical reason, but suggests merely that it is a legal question of the limitation of the constitutional power of Congress.

I was interested in the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], because, of course, if it is taken for granted, without examination of the decisions of the Supreme Court or the reasons upon which they rest, and which have continued unbroken from the foundation of the Government till now; if you pass a law that is admittedly constitutional would be almost——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have for the first time had an opportunity of seeing in print the substitute proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I notice that the substitute does not contain the objectionable words found in the bill as reported. I should seriously object to supporting a bill containing the provision that an employee should be liable under this penal statute for a violation of the provisions of the statute.

At the bottom of page 5 of the bill as reported by the committee will be found the following words:

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, or employee, knowingly violating any of the provisions of this act—

Now, an employee may not have either the opportunity or the intelligence which will enable him to avoid responsibility under this penal statute, and it is not necessary for the purpose——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator to the fact that the words "or employee knowingly" are not in the bill reported by the committee, but constitute a proposed amendment by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. HEYBURN. That is so explained, but as printed it does not so appear. I am just informed by the Senator who introduced the amendment that he intends to withdraw it, so that it will not be necessary to consider it further. But I want to add a word. No provision of this bill should fix a responsibility upon an employee who has not or may not have either the intelligence or the opportunity of controlling the action that would result in his criminal liability under this proposed statute. But if the amendment is to be withdrawn, it is not necessary to further consider it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it has been stated, and very thoughtfully and well, that the first consideration in connection with this measure should be the safety of the passengers traveling over the railroads. I think it will be conceded, however, that the trainmen take equal chances with the passengers upon passenger trains, and that as to freight trains the matter of life and death is entirely with the employees. So it seems to me that in providing for the good and safety of the employees we are providing for the public as well. I would rather hear from the employees upon this subject than from those who may talk from a theoretical, sentimental, or an outside point of view. I therefore send to the desk and ask to have read, in my time, petitions by associations of trainmen.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator if the associations of trainmen are composed of the men who operate the trains—engineers, firemen, and conductors—or whether they are dispatchers and superintendents?

Mr. WARREN. The papers which I present are official copies of resolutions passed in meetings of trainmen—conductors, engineers, firemen, etc.—those who actually perform the duties of running trains. They are not walking delegates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas a bill has been introduced in Congress, known as the La Follette bill, or Senate bill 5133, fixing an arbitrary limit on the hours which employees in the transportation department of railroads shall be allowed to work; and

Whereas the employees of railroads have been able to make agreements with the managers of said roads regarding the hours which they shall be required to remain on duty which are satisfactory to both the employees and the managers, and solicitous of the welfare and safety of the traveling public; and

Whereas although accidents have happened where employees have been on duty a long number of hours, the number of hours on duty are merely an incident connected with the accident and is rarely the cause of the accident; and

Whereas the avowed object of this bill is to shorten the trains and get them over the road at a higher average rate of speed, and if this were true we would give this measure our hearty support, but from our knowledge of railroading gained by many years of experience, we know that this measure if it becomes a law will compel railroad companies to shorten the divisions and increase the tonnage of trains, keeping us on the road nearer the sixteen-hour limit on all runs than is now the case; and

Whereas the making of shorter divisions will cause many of the present terminals to be abandoned; this means financial ruin to many employees who have the savings of a lifetime invested in their homes, and will result in great hardship to the older employees, who must on account of age soon retire from active service; and

Whereas on account of our long years of experience in railroad service we believe that we are better qualified to judge the result of this measure than men who have never been in the service: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the State legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors of Nebraska, in session at Lincoln, Nebr., this 31st day of December, 1906, That we are unalterably opposed to this measure; it would operate to the detriment of men in train service by increasing their expenses and reducing their income with no advantage to the traveling public; and be it further

Resolved, That we cause these resolutions to be spread on the records of this meeting, and that the secretary be directed to forward a copy of said resolutions to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State of Nebraska as a protest against this measure.

Adopted by the State legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors in session at Lincoln, Nebr., this 31st day of December, 1906.

Approved.

S. C. MECOMBER,
North Platte, Nebr., Chairman.

Attest:

S. H. HIGHLAND,
Alliance, Nebr., Secretary.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to submit some observations on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Another paper is at the desk, presented by the Senator from Wyoming, with the request that it be read.

Mr. WARREN. As that is very much of the same tone as the one just read and is from employees of the Burlington system, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without taking the time to read it, so that the Senator from Texas may now have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

PROTEST FROM CHICAGO, BURLINGTON AND QUINCY TRAIN AND ENGINE MEN.

SHERIDAN, WYO., January 1, 1907.

Hon. C. D. CLARK, United States Senator,
Hon. F. E. WARREN, United States Senator,
Hon. F. W. MONDELL, Congressman,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: At a union meeting held January 1, 1907, of the men employed in the train and engine service of the Sheridan division of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas it has come to our notice that there is now pending before Congress and the House of Representatives a bill known as H. R. bill 18671, or better known among us as the 'sixteen-hour bill,' which we think has some very objectionable features: Therefore,

"We hereby respectfully petition our representatives in both Houses of Congress that they use every means in their power to modify the arbitrary parts of said bill. While we are in favor of a law of some kind that will as a rule do away with long hours on duty, we do believe and know that there are circumstances that arise in the handling of traffic by railroads that, while strictly speaking, are unavoidable, yet would not come under the exceptions provided for in the bill as it now reads. There are numerous things that might happen to a train that is only a few miles from its terminal and perhaps on the main line and the time limit might expire before relief could be gotten to them. Then, again, a crew might be but a few miles from their home terminal and the time expire, when a few minutes perhaps they could reach their home terminal, where they could get their rest at home, as they should.

We do not believe, gentlemen, that you want to make a law that will compel a crew 5, 10, or 15 miles from their home terminal to lay up for rest just because the sixteen-hour limit was up; then when their rest was up run them into their home terminal and double them right out again. This would work more of a hardship on the men than on the company. Then, again, a crew may have had a hard run from their home terminal to their terminal away from home, which under the bill as proposed would compel them to have ten hours off duty, as the case might be. For example, this crew stands for a good run home after, say, five or six hours' rest, which could be reached in, say, six or eight hours. We have a run like this every day on our division, which has been handled to the entire satisfaction of both the railroad company and its men, with five or six hours' rest.

We think it would be a hardship on the railroad company, but a much greater hardship on the men, if the railroad company were compelled to keep a crew at these particular points to protect this train just because the regular crews on such runs could not get the whole of the required ten hours off duty.

Therefore it is resolved at this union meeting that we jointly request you to do all in your power to so amend this bill in favor of the railroads of this country that unavoidable and unforeseen accidents be excepted in favor of the men; that an hour or two will get them to their home terminal be excepted and further in favor of the men when a few hours' rest at their terminal away from home will start them toward their home terminal, and that the men be allowed to use their own judgment as to whether they are able to go out or not.

Committee: D. H. Steele, J. G. Wagner, Ralph Richardson, committee of Order of Railway Conductors; Harry Pratt, William M. Bahl, D. S. Utley, committee Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; J. F. Smith, S. A. Gould, H. C. Wehrs, committee Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen; O. D. Sterling, F. P. Conlin, C. S. De Lapp, committee Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to send up to the desk a telegram to be read in this connection?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. Since those resolutions were drawn I have received a telegram from the order of trainmen in Omaha, which I should like to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska requests the reading of a dispatch. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., January 9, 1907.

E. J. BURKETT, Washington, D. C.:

Overland Lodge, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, request your vote in favor of Senate bill 5133.

H. E. GRAHAM,
Secretary, 1010 South Eighteenth Street.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks I submitted a moment ago I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the language of the bill as reported from the committee. I read from page 5:

To require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train—

Not any train engaged in any character of commerce, but—any train in which such commerce is hauled, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train—

No, sir; but—any train by which such commerce is affected.

The proposition submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]—and I hasten with it because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] desires to close the discussion—is:

To require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is conducted, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is affected.

Therefore the committee which has reported this measure to the Senate, as well as the Senator from Connecticut, understands that it is without the power of Congress to regulate the movement of trains confined within the limits of a State and not hauling interstate freight or passengers or foreign freight or passengers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for a moment in order that I may offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To offer an amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire if it is in order to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It can be offered and remain pending.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to present an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A proposed amendment to the proposed amendment of the Senator from Connecticut: On page 2 of the proposed amendment, line 18, after the word "act," strike out the remainder of the section and insert:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the most that could happen under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Georgia to the substitute which I have proposed would be that the court would not hold the statute in question applicable to a train not engaged in interstate commerce. It is a fact that the substitute employs in that respect exactly the language of other statutes which have been passed by Congress relative to kindred subjects, the safety-appliance act being one.

Mr. President, three substitutes have been read with a view of being proposed later—one by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], one by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and one by myself, and yet an examination and comparison of these proposed substitutes with the bill reported by the committee will show very little change from the proposed bill. The presentation of these substitutes is not a confession upon anybody's part that the bill as originally reported was a fatally defective bill. That bill conforms line by line almost exactly to the statutes of fourteen States which have legislated upon this subject. Those statutes have received judicial construction; those statutes have been tested by experiment and experience. I desire also to call attention to the fact that the petitions which have been presented to the Senate come very largely from the people interested, and, so far as the employees are concerned, are in favor of legislation similar in character.

The only modification which the substitute proposed by me would make in the bill as reported would be to except from the operation of the statute cases of excessive hours of labor arising because of casualties the knowledge of which was not in the possession of the railroad company at the time the employee entered upon his service and for casualties that occurred before as well as for casualties that occurred after he had entered upon such service.

Besides prohibiting more than sixteen consecutive hours of service, my substitute provides that no employee engaged in the movement of trains shall be required or permitted to serve more than sixteen hours within any twenty-four-hour period, whether the service be consecutive or otherwise, without a reasonable allowance of time for rest.

At the last session it required ten roll calls, and several hours of filibustering tactics had to be contended against before it was possible to secure for this bill a place upon the Calendar where it could have consideration of the Senate. Even then the matter of securing a vote upon it was delayed, and it was only after four days of these proceedings that an agreement was finally secured fixing the time at which a vote would be taken upon the bill.

The necessity of legislation upon this subject need not now be urged, although it was argued when this bill first came up for consideration that it was "paternalistic," a "mischievous bill," and that no such legislation was necessary. That argument is not made now. It is conceded that it is necessary. The death roll and the roll of the injured as they grow from year to year have impressed that upon everybody. Within the last five years the number of killed and injured railroad employees and passengers has increased over 70 per cent. Within the last five years 277,475 have been killed or injured by the railroads of this country, almost as many people as constitute the population of this great national capital.

I believe, sir, that legislation of this character ought to be adopted. If there should develop imperfections or defects which have not been provided for in the proposed substitute, they can be taken care of in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Secretary will read the committee amendment. The Chair would suggest to the Senate that confusion may be avoided if Senators will address their amendments to the reprint of the bill ordered on the 8th of January. There are a number of prints. The print from which the Secretary will read is the reprint of January 8.

Mr. BACON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, there are now before the Senate the original bill and three substitutes. I desire to ask the presiding officer if it is not the intention to take up each one of those separately for amendment, and when one has been perfected that it shall be laid aside in order that another may be taken up, to go through the same process, so that after each of the four different propositions has been perfected by its friends the Senate may choose between them?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the rule to be to consider first the committee amendment. The friends of the amendment may perfect it by amendments before the Senate proceeds to consider the substitutes which may be offered. And when the proposed substitutes are offered they may be perfected in the same manner.

Mr. BACON. In other words, after the original has been perfected it will be laid aside and the several substitutes will be taken up in their order?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to inquire, so as to be advised definitely, whether a motion to recommit is in order now, or will be at any time during the consideration of this measure?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that a motion to recommit would be in contravention of the distinct language of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WARREN. The rule of the Chair being that the unanimous-consent agreement bars the entertainment of the motion to recommit?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If that question should be presented in the progress of the consideration of the bill, the Chair, according to his present opinion, would so hold. The Secretary will read.

Mr. MONEY. Excuse me, Mr. President; I did not hear exactly what the Chair said. I am anxious to know the decision on that point. What was the decision of the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, in answering the Senator from Wyoming, stated his opinion to be that a motion to recommit now or later would be in contravention of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon, Mr. President; what was the decision of the Chair? That is the inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. I think I was not understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. My question was, What was the decision of the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has rendered no decision, but stated that, according to his present opinion, if the question should be presented for his decision, he would hold that a motion to recommit was out of order.

The Secretary will state the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, printed in italics, beginning on page 3, line 24:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee to go on duty without having had at least ten hours for rest.

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train in which such commerce is hauled, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is affected, to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee to go on duty without having had at least ten hours for rest.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, violating any of the provisions of this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. CULBERSON. A point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair suggested that we follow the reprint of January 8, 1907. The Secretary does not seem to be reading from that print as we have it here.

Several SENATORS. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He is reading the committee amendment first.

Mr. TILLMAN. He is reading nothing but the italicized portion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary is reading the committee amendment, which appears in italics.

The reading of the amendment having been concluded,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. Is it not proper to take up the amendments to the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment found on page 4, lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4 of the bill, beginning in line 4, strike out the words "casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip" and insert "unavoidable accident, or act of God, or resulting from a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time he left the terminal."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Is that the only amendment we are to vote on? My copy of the bill appears to have several.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They have not been offered. They are printed in the bill, but it is necessary for Senators desiring that their proposed amendments shall be considered to offer them from the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, on page 4, line 17, to strike out the words "for rest" and insert "off duty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to insert, after the word "terminal," in line 8, after the amendment which has just been adopted, the words:

Or except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Accidental delay of trains?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask to have it read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the amendment having been adopted in Committee of the Whole, it can not be further amended until the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am simply inserting it now as a part of the original amendment, to come in after the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh!

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not interfere with the Senator's amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the last word in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the word "terminal," on page 4, line 8, it is proposed to insert:

Or except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 5, line 15, I move to strike out the words "for rest" and insert "off duty," an amendment similar to the one heretofore adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I call up the amendment heretofore offered, to be inserted on page 4.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, in the committee amendment, line 3, after the word "sixteen," it is proposed to strike out the word "consecutive;" and after the word "hours," in line 4, to insert "during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours;" also, in line 16, after the word "duty," to insert "who has been in service sixteen hours during twenty-six consecutive hours."

Mr. PATTERSON. How will that part of it read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read that portion as it will read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty more than sixteen hours during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours, except when by unavoidable accident, or act of God, or resulting from a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time he left the terminal, or except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal, or to require or permit any such employee to go on duty who has been on duty sixteen hours out of twenty-six consecutive hours without having had at least ten hours off duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I call for the yeas and nays. It seems to me to be the crucial proposition.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I ask a parliamentary question? Did I understand the Chair to declare the amendment carried?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had not announced his decision upon the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. The yeas and nays have been ordered, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have not been ordered, one-fifth of the Senators present not having demanded a roll call.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair as to whether the amendment is carried or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to put the question again. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 7, lines 11 to 14, inclusive, I move the amendment that is found in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 11, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to crews of wrecking or relief trains.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. In order to perfect the amendment adopted on my motion some moments ago, I move that the words inserted after "hours," in line 4, be likewise inserted after the word "sixteen," in line 8, page 5, striking out the word "consecutive." The first portion of the section, it will be observed, relates to the District of Columbia and the Territories and the second portion to interstate commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER. No debate.

Mr. KEAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CARTER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's amendment, then, proposes to make it uniform?

Mr. GALLINGER. No debate, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 8, before the word "hours," strike out the word "consecutive," and after the word "hours" insert "during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I also offer an amendment to come in after the word "duty" in line 15, in the second portion of the section.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 15, after the word "duty" insert "who has been in service sixteen hours during twenty-six consecutive hours."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move the amendment that will be found in lines 15 to 18, page 6, in the printed bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 15, after the word "occurred," insert:

But no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I move the following amendment at the end of the first section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following:

The extra time served by any employee on account of casualty or emergency as hereinbefore provided shall be paid for by the carrier, in addition to the compensation of the employee for regular service. The rate of compensation for extra time served shall, in proportion to the time consumed by regular service, be not less than the rate of compensation therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, which has just been read. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment stands rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer as section 5 the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit or in any way interfere with the employment, with their consent, of men whose hours of labor are affected hereln, upon runs, single or turn, which, in the reasonable judgment of the officers of the respective railroads and of the men so employed, can be completed, in the ordinary course of business of the carrier, within sixteen hours.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the amendment be read again, unless it is in print.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been printed.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask that the amendment be read again? There is so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the substitute which I send to the desk.

Mr. BACON. I desire to know whether, under the ruling of the Chair, after the bill has been laid aside in order to give way for amendments to the substitutes, it can thereafter be amended? I will state the purpose of my inquiry. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to whichever proposition may be adopted by the Senate and that upon which it will vote. Otherwise it would be necessary for me to offer it to each one of them, and I desire to offer it but once. If I can offer it to such one of these four different propositions as the Senate may select, I will withhold it until it shall have determined which of the propositions it will favor as the one upon which it will vote. If not, I shall have to offer it before the original bill is laid aside and then offer it successively to each of the substitutes.

Mr. SPOONER. Offer it in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I will adopt the suggestion which has just been made and which had not occurred to me. I will offer it in the Senate. So I will withhold it for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] offers a substitute which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain in service more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having been at least ten hours for rest.

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is conducted, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is affected, to remain in service more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such common carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having had at least ten hours for rest.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, knowingly violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred, but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to employers operating wreck or relief trains.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer as a substitute what I send to the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. That can not be done.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the substitute now offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is in the same attitude as the others, for such amendments as may be offered, but it will not now be in order to offer it for action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I simply remarked that I understood that the substitute now offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was offered in the same way that the previous substitute had been offered, simply for the purpose of such amendments as might be presented. Otherwise it would not be in order, there being already pending the original bill and amendments to it and a substitute therefor.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand it, a substitute has been offered by the Senator from Connecticut, which is in order, but no other amendment to that substitute can be offered because that is an amendment in the third degree. His substitute is now offered for the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The report of the committee was itself a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My amendment is a substitute for the committee's substitute, and is an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. My point was against the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The only thing in order now is the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is as I understand it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Massachusetts is undoubtedly correct, if the substitute as now offered is a proposition to be voted on for acceptance or rejection. That was the purpose I had in view in calling the attention of the Chair to it. It is only in order for the purpose of itself being amended, and then to be laid aside. The previous substitute of the Senator from Connecticut would then be in order for voting on it.

Mr. LODGE. We can not amend the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut because that would be an amendment in the third degree. We can vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, and if it is adopted it can then be amended in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the Secretary read Rule XVIII, which governs the question under consideration.

The Secretary read Rule XVIII of the standing rules of the Senate, as follows:

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition; nor shall it prevent a motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion to strike out prevent a motion to strike out and insert. But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment in line 6 to the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut, striking out the word "consecutive" and inserting, after the word "hours," the words "during a period of twenty-six hours."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment to the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of the proposed substitute, after the word "sixteen," line 5, strike out the word "consecutive," and after the word "hours" insert the words "during a period of twenty-six hours."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I fail to understand how we can amend an amendment to an amendment. This is an amendment in the third degree. The pending amendment is the substitute offered by the committee. That we have been perfecting, and we can continue to perfect it. The Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee, and the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is clearly in order, but I utterly fail to understand how the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut can be amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Rule XVIII reads:

But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question.

Mr. LODGE. I call attention to the fact, if the Chair will permit me, that the part to be stricken out is the original bill. The amendment is the substitute of the committee. Those are the two points covered by the rule. We are now perfecting the substitute offered by the committee.

Mr. BACON. No; we have perfected that and laid it aside.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. We have not perfected it. The Senator from Connecticut is now offering an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which is a perfecting amendment. There are other amendments to be offered.

Mr. BACON. If I may be pardoned, the proceeding is one which is well recognized in all parliamentary law. It is simply this: The rule which limits amendments in number applies to each substantive proposition. Where there is an original bill pending and two or more substitutes are offered therefor, covering the entire scope of the original bill, and offered in the place of the entire scope of the original bill, it is manifest that it would be utterly impossible to perfect the several measures if the ordinary rule of amendment were applied to it. Therefore, if Senators will look at any of the works on parliamentary law, they will find laid down specifically this, as a course of procedure: The original measure is taken up in order that it may be put in the shape most favorable for its passage by its friends. It is then laid aside and the next substantive amendment covering the scope of the entire proposition is taken up for a similar procedure, in order that it may be perfected by its friends. Then it is laid aside and the subsequent amendment is taken up, not for action in the way of rejection or acceptance, but purely for amendment. When it is thus perfected it is laid aside. Then when the time comes to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of either one of these substantive propositions the body returns to the original rule.

For illustration, the original bill having been perfected and laid aside and the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut having been perfected and laid aside, when the subsequent one offered by the Senator from Wisconsin has also been perfected and laid aside, the question will be then upon the two original propositions. The question will be, first, upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, and, if that is adopted, it displaces the original bill and stands in the place of the original bill. If, however, the Senate should reject the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut, then the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin would take its place and be voted upon by the Senate, and if it should be adopted it would stand in place of the original proposition. If it should be rejected, we would be brought to a vote upon the original proposition.

Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say, without assuming to be a parliamentary expert, that Senators will find that procedure laid down in works on parliamentary law in too plain language to be possibly misunderstood, and it is the only practicable way in which a legislative body can proceed in the consideration of several substantive measures which cover the entire scope of the original proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should be very glad if the Senator would refer us to the general parliamentary law where it is laid down that we can take up four or five substitutes, one after the other, and amend them when none of them are before the body in any parliamentary sense. The only thing before the Senate now is the amendment reported from the committee in the nature of a substitute. That is the pending substitute. If an amendment is offered to that in the nature of a substitute it is perfectly in order, as is the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut; we can vote it up or vote it down, but we can not amend it at this stage.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. DANIEL. Is not the original bill now before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, the original bill is before the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. There is a substitute offered by the committee for that bill now pending before the Senate, to which amendments have been offered and rejected or embodied in it. There is now proposed a substitute for the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut. That is in the third degree of amendment, and the rule does not admit of the consideration of that substitute until the amendment before the Senate has been voted upon. That is the position, as I understand it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator has stated it precisely, though I did not, on account of the confusion around me, hear all that was said.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is reported here as an amendment to the bill and not to a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is here, and the amendment to the amendment is in the nature of a substitute; but it makes no difference whether it is in the nature of a substitute or not so far as its parliamentary position is concerned. It is the amendment of the committee. To that amendment of the committee the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], as he is entitled to do, offers an amendment, which is also in the nature of a substitute. The Senator from Connecticut can himself perfect his amendment before offering it, or now, in any way he pleases; but we can not vote on an amendment to his amendment. It is perfectly clear that that would be an amendment in the third degree. If we would take up a series of substitutes we should find ourselves adrift here with four or five substitute amendments and not know really which one we were amending or what the condition of any one was. We can deal with but two amendments at a time, as it seems to me. I do not see how we can go off on a series of substitutes which, in a parliamentry sense, are not before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is right in his contention, and that any amendment offered to this amendment would be an amendment in the third degree. If this amendment be adopted, then in the Senate it will be clearly open to amendment, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] can offer his amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator from Maine takes his seat I want to ask him a question. As I understand, if the amendment offered by way of substitute by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] should be adopted, then it becomes open to amendment in the same way that he is now attempting to amend the committee amendment?

Mr. FRYE. It will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that, if his amendment is adopted, that does not preclude the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] from hereafter offering his substitute as an amendment to the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FRYE. Clearly, in the Senate he could offer his amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. FRYE. The Chair will allow me to repeat what has already been said, that it is within the capacity and right of the Senator from Connecticut to amend his own amendment, if he desires to do so.

Mr. HALE. To modify it.

Mr. FRYE. To modify it to suit himself, if he desires to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut undoubtedly has the right to modify his own amendment as he sees fit.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that as it is within my power to modify my amendment, I should like, at the proper point, that the language which the Senator from Montana proposes as an amendment to the committee's substitute which the Senate adopted be interlined and made a part of my amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from Connecticut will, of his own motion, modify his substitute, that will be quite satisfactory to me. I want, however, to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] a question in connection with the statement he made as to the status of the substitutes and proposed substitutes. If the substitute as perfected by the Senator from Connecticut shall be adopted, can another substitute be offered to the entire measure?

Mr. FRYE. It can in the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. But not as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. Not as in Committee of the Whole, because the Committee of the Whole will have disposed of that entire thing if it shall be adopted. That is the final disposition in Committee of the Whole. Then when the bill is reported to the Senate it is still open to amendment, and the substitute of the Senator from Wisconsin can be offered.

Mr. PATTERSON. One other question. I understand the Senator from Connecticut has accepted the amendment suggested by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is all I desire to know.

Mr. FRYE. Just another word, if the President pleases. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut shall be voted down, then, clearly, another amendment will be in order—any amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the amendment may be read.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let it be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of Mr. BRANDEGEE is modified as follows: On page 1 of the proposed amendment, line 5, after the word "sixteen," by striking out the word "consecutive;" after the word "hours," on line 6, by inserting "during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours;" on page 2, line 8, before the word "hours," by striking out the word "consecutive" and after the word "hours," by inserting "during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] as modified.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like that the proposed substitute be again read, so that we may understand what we are voting upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain in service more than sixteen hours during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having had at least ten hours for rest.

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is conducted, or to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train by which such commerce is affected, to remain in service more than sixteen hours during a period of twenty-six consecutive hours, except when on account of an emergency, which by reasonable care on the part of such common carrier, its officers or agents, could not have been avoided, he is prevented from reaching its terminal; or, except in such emergency, to require or permit any such employee, having been in service as aforesaid, to go again into service without having had at least ten hours for rest.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier, or any of its officers or agents, knowingly violating any of the provisions of this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred, but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation; and it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to employers operating wreck or relief trains.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CULBERSON. I inquire if the question is not divisible? I understand that this is an amendment to an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I may be allowed a word, it seems to me that the pending question is on the substitute—to strike out the substitute reported by the committee and insert what I have proposed as a substitute. How can that question be divided?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, of course I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, but the proposition is this: This substitute now pending for a vote has been amended by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. Modified.

Mr. CULBERSON. Modified by the Senator from Connecticut, as suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. The question with me is whether we are not entitled to have that question divided and be permitted to vote upon the proposition submitted by the Senator from Montana. Of course I understand the suggestion that the Senator from Connecticut can control his own amendment, and possibly that is an answer; but by this parliamentary inquiry I intended to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that he probably had better let the amendment stand on its merits.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will withdraw the modification proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, there is no occasion for him to do that. When he modifies his amendment, he makes the modification a part of his amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, the question is not divisible, it being a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. CULBERSON. But the Senator from Connecticut offers to withdraw it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to withdraw it, as I do not desire to imperil the bill in any way, and renew it in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, why should the Senator withdraw that modification?

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I will move to amend the substitute by striking out the words suggested by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That can not be done.

Mr. HALE. That is out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, it is not in order at the present stage of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let the vote be taken on the proposed substitute, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the proposed substitute.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] withdrew the modification. He said he would offer it in the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I said I was perfectly willing to withdraw it if a proper reason was shown for doing so; but I will allow it to stand and let a vote be taken on it as it stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLLIVER (when Mr. ALLISON'S name was called). I am requested by my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] to state that on this bill and all the amendments pending to it he is paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I will make no further statement to this effect during the remaining votes.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. BURNHAM'S name was called). I announce that my colleague [Mr. BURNHAM] is unavoidably absent and that he is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. DRYDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. DRYDEN] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I make this announcement in connection with all votes in relation to this bill.

Mr. McENERY (when his name was called). I wish to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] on this bill and all the amendments to it. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. MORGAN's name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. DEPEW (when Mr. PLATT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLATT] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY]. I make this announcement to cover all the votes in relation to this bill.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is absent. I have inquired of his colleague, but I am unable to ascertain his position on the bill or any of the amendments. I therefore withhold my vote. I make this announcement once for all.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. McLAURIN] is absent on account of protracted sickness. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN].

Mr. TELLER. I am requested by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who is detained on account of sickness in his family, to say that he is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. If present, he would vote for the bill as reported by the committee.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—23.

So Mr. BRANDEGEE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours for rest; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period to continue on duty or to go on duty without having had at least eight hours for rest within such twenty-four-hour period.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier or any of its officers or agents violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each and every violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of such violations as may come to its knowledge.

That to enable the Commission to execute and enforce the provisions of this act it shall have the power to employ such inspectors or other persons as may be necessary. To enforce the provisions of this act the Commission and its agents or employees thereunto duly authorized by order of said Commission shall have the power to administer oaths, interrogate witnesses, take testimony, and require the production of books and papers. The Commission may also order depositions taken before any officer in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia qualified by law to take the same.

The provisions of this act shall not apply to relief or wreck trains.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. CARMACK's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CARMACK] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is unavoidably detained from his seat to-day by illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Bacon	Du Pont	Kittredge	Rayner
Berry	Elkins	La Follette	Scott
Beveridge	Flint	Latimer	Simmons
Brandegee	Foster	Mallory	Stone
Burkett	Frazier	Money	Taliaferro
Culberson	Gearin	Nelson	Teller
Daniel	Hansbrough	Overman	Tillman
Dolliver	Hemenway	Patterson	Warner
Dubois	Hopkins	Perkins	Whyte

NAYS—32.

Ankeny	Crane	Gallinger	McCumber
Blackburn	Cullom	Hale	Millard
Bulkeley	Depew	Heyburn	Pettus
Burrows	Dick	Kean	Piles
Carter	Dillingham	Knox	Proctor
Clapp	Foraker	Lodge	Smoot

NOT VOTING—22.

Aldrich	Burnham	McEnery	Penrose
Alger	Carmack	McLaurin	Platt
Allee	Clarke, Ark.	Martin	Spooner
Allison	Clay	Morgan	Wetmore
Bailey	Dryden	Newlands
Benson	Gamble	Nixon

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill by striking out "casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip," and insert "unavoidable accident, or act of God, or resulting from a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time he left the terminal."

That is the amendment which was adopted to the previous amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip," and in lieu thereof to insert, "unavoidable accident, or act of God, or resulting from a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time he left the terminal."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULBERSON. In the confusion some of us did not hear the amendment. I ask that it be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Secretary will begin at the beginning of the sentence, so that we may get some idea of what is proposed to be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the clause as it will read if amended.

Mr. SCOTT. I was just going to say that I do not believe half of us know what the amendment is. It has never been printed, and none of us have read it. We are groping in the dark on the whole thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It has been read four times.

Mr. LODGE. Debate is not in order, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. If amended the clause will read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad, in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours except when by unavoidable accident, or act of God, or resulting from a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time he left the terminal, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. He is for the bill and so am I, but on this amendment he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea." So I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). The same announcement which I made on the last roll call applies likewise to this.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Ankeny	Dick	Hopkins	Piles
Bacon	Dillingham	Kean	Proctor
Bulkeley	Du Pont	Lodge	Scott
Carter	Foraker	Long	Simmons
Clapp	Frye	McCumber	Smoot
Clark, Mont.	Gallinger	Money	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Hale	Overman	Warren
Crane	Heyburn	Perkins

NAYS—35.

Berry	Dolliver	Kittredge	Pettus
Beveridge	Dubois	Knox	Rayner
Blackburn	Elkins	La Follette	Stone
Brandegee	Flint	Latimer	Taliaferro
Burkett	Foster	McCreary	Teller
Burrows	Frazier	Mallory	Tillman
Culberson	Gearin	Millard	Warner
Daniel	Hansbrough	Nelson	Whyte
Depew	Hemenway	Patterson

NOT VOTING—24.

Aldrich	Burnham	Fulton	Newlands
Alger	Carmack	Gamble	Nixon
Allee	Clarke, Ark.	McEnery	Penrose
Allison	Clay	McLaurin	Platt
Bailey	Cullom	Martin	Spooner
Benson	Dryden	Morgan	Wetmore

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should now like to have the bill read as it stands, for the purpose of amendment. I wish to offer an amendment, and I desire to have the bill read so as to have a correct copy before me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota requests that the bill be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip——

Mr. MCCUMBER. That is as far as I wish the Secretary to go. After the word "trip," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "trip," it is proposed to insert:

Or except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second? In the opinion of the Chair, there is not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the vote taken again.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he ask for a division.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 32, nays 23.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 2 after the words "shall be," in the fourth line, down to and including the word "occurred," and insert:

deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer an amendment to come in at the close of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be stated

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following:

The employee who is required or permitted to serve for any time beyond the hours of service herein provided shall be paid by the carrier therefor what such extra service is reasonably worth, in addition to his regular compensation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I have another amendment which I desire to offer, to come in at the same place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1 the following:

The extra time served by any employee on account of an emergency, as heretofore provided, shall be paid for by the carrier in addition to the compensation of the employee for regular service. The rate of compensation for extra service shall be in proportion to that for regular service, according to the time consumed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask, Mr. President, where the amendment is to come in?

Mr. DANIEL. At the end of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the end of the first section. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where the words "for rest" occur in the bill—I think in two places—I move to strike them out and insert the words "off duty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the end of the first paragraph of section 2 I move to add the words "but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first paragraph of section 2 it is proposed to insert——

Mr. MALLORY. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the major portion of that paragraph has been stricken out by the amendment already adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; this is to be inserted after the word "knowledge."

The SECRETARY. After the word "knowledge," at the end of the first paragraph, section 2, it is proposed to insert:

But no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that section 2 be read as it will stand if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted. It is clearly not applicable to the section now.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier or any of its officers or agents violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of such violations as may come to its knowledge. But no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. How many sections, may I inquire, does the bill contain as it now stands, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill contains two sections.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to be known as section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any interstate railway to move any train or trains carrying commodities entering into interstate or foreign commerce containing tonnage in excess of the registered capacity of the engine or engines attached thereto. Any officer, agent, or employee of any such railway who violates the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 for each offense.

Mr. RAYNER. I make the point of order upon the amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the amendment should be again read.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be again read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is too much confusion in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire, at the request of a number of engineers, to offer an amendment to be inserted as a new section at the end of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

This act shall not apply to cases where a continuance on duty beyond sixteen hours will enable an employee to reach a terminal: Provided, That at the expiration of sixteen hours he is within 20 miles of such terminal.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any railway company the railroad of which lies wholly within the limits of one State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MALLORY, Mr. PATTERSON, and Mr. BEVERIDGE demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any railway company the railroad of which lies wholly within the limits of one State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bacon	Crane	Kean	Proctor
Bulkeley	Foraker	Lodge	Scott
Burrows	Gallinger	Long	Smoot
Clark, Mont.	Hale	Money	Warren

NAYS—46.

Ankeny	Dick	Hopkins	Piles
Berry	Dolliver	Kittredge	Rayner
Beveridge	Dubois	La Follette	Simmons
Blackburn	Du Pont	Latimer	Stone
Brandegee	Elkins	McCreary	Sutherland
Burkett	Flint	McCumber	Taliaferro
Carter	Frazier	Mallory	Teller
Clapp	Frye	Millard	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Fulton	Nelson	Warner
Culberson	Gearin	Patterson	Whyte
Daniel	Hansbrough	Perkins
Depew	Hemenway	Pettus

NOT VOTING—28.

Aldrich	Bailey	Clarke, Ark.	Dryden
Alger	Benson	Clay	Foster
Allee	Burnham	Cullom	Gamble
Allison	Carmack	Dillingham	Heyburn
Knox	Martin	Nixon	Platt
McEnery	Morgan	Overman	Spooner
McLaurin	Newlands	Penrose	Wetmore

So Mr. BACON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to insert, after the word "train," in the line "or connected with the movement of any train"—the number is not marked on the paper I have—the following words:

Which is engaged in transporting passengers or articles of commerce between States or between the United States and a foreign country.

[After a pause.] I understand the amendment which was adopted on motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] accomplishes the same purpose, and I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia withdraws the proposed amendment. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment to come in as a new section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. In addition to the penalty prescribed herein, any such common carrier violating the provisions of this act shall not be permitted to interpose the defense of contributory negligence in the event of action being brought to recover for damages resulting from any accident which shall occur by which injury shall be inflicted on any employee who may be detained in service more than said sixteen hours, notwithstanding the negligence of such employee may have caused or contributed to his own injury or death; nor shall such defense of contributory negligence be interposed if the said injury result in death of said employee and the action be brought for the benefit of his next of kin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Secretary to read that portion of the bill showing the number of hours necessary for rest after the sixteen hours of service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Secretary read as follows:

Or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours off duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to strike out the word "ten" before "hours" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "ten," before the word "hours," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no further amendments be proposed, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the bill as amended be read. It has not been printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip, and except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours off duty; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four hour period to continue on duty or to go on duty without having had at least eight hours off duty within such twenty-four hour period.

SEC. 2. That any such common carrier or any of its officers or agents violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fully investigate all cases of the violation of this act and to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of such violations as may come to its knowledge.

That to enable the Commission to execute and enforce the provisions of this act it shall have the power to employ such inspectors or other persons as may be necessary. To enforce the provisions of this act, the Commission and its agents or employees thereunto duly authorized by order of said Commission shall have the power to administer oaths, interrogate witnesses, take testimony, and require the production of books and papers. The Commission may also order depositions taken before any officer in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia qualified by law to take the same.

The provisions of this act shall not apply to relief or wreck trains.

Mr. KNOX. I am somewhat handicapped by not having a copy of the bill, but if the bill can be amended at this stage I should like to offer an amendment. I think the words "carrying interstate freight or passengers" should be stricken out, and the words "engaged in interstate commerce" should be substituted. As the bill now stands in the case of such an accident as occurred at Terra Cotta, a train coming from Pennsylvania and causing the accident would not have been included, because it was not carrying either freight or passengers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's suggestion is that it should read "engaged in interstate commerce," I understand.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is this matter debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not debatable. Debate is not in order. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Pennsylvania made a statement and argument.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He made a statement.

Mr. CULBERSON. The statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania was in itself an argument, and in my judgment a false one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. So far as that was so he was out of order. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "train," where it appears near the beginning of the bill, strike out the words "carrying interstate freight or passengers" and insert the words "engaged in interstate commerce."

Mr. CULBERSON. Is an amendment to the amendment in order? The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania would, in my judgment, render the bill unconstitutional.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I make the point or order that the bill was ordered engrossed and to be read a third time, and that it was read the third time, and was so announced by the Chair, and therefore it is not open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's point of order is well taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I move to reconsider the vote whereby that action was taken.

Mr. DANIEL. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to have that portion of the bill read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The bill reads:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, etc.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the words "carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers" be stricken out and the words "engaged in hauling interstate freight" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "train" strike out the following words: "Carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers," and insert "engaged in hauling interstate freight trains."

Mr. CULBERSON. I have been unable to hear on account of the confusion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not the amendment I originally understood that the Senator offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "train" strike out the following words: "Carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers" and insert "engaged in hauling interstate trains;" so as to read: "The movement of any train engaged in hauling interstate trains."

Mr. KNOX. Let me have a copy of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now I move to strike out those words, because the bill already applies to interstate commerce, and they are mere surplusage.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The words the Senator wants stricken out are not surplusage——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The Senator from South Carolina proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "train" strike out the following words: "Carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers."

Mr. PATTERSON. Now let the clause be read as it would read if amended.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry. Are not the words just read, and which are proposed to be stricken out, words which were inserted as an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They were not.

Mr. BACON. I judged by the way the Secretary read it that it was an interlineation.

Mr. TILLMAN. They were inserted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and he did not really see, I think——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is out of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask that that portion of the bill be read as amended, should the amendment be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed, and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG (when Mr. BENSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BENSON] is unavoidably absent and is not paired. If he were present he would vote for the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BURNHAM] is unavoidably absent, and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Georgia can vote if he chooses. I vote "yea."

Mr. KEAN (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. DRYDEN] is absent. If he were present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. NEWLAND'S name was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. If the Senator from Nevada were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FLINT (when Mr. NIXON'S name was called). The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. WETMORE'S name was called). The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] is necessarily absent. If he were present, I am authorized to state that he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am authorized to say that if the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], who is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY. My colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN] is absent, sick. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN]. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] informs me that if his colleague [Mr. BURNHAM], with whom I am paired, were present, he would vote "yea." I therefore am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 70, nays 1, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 10, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 738, have had the same under consideration and recommend that the following resolution be agreed to in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That in considering in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill H. R. 23551, 'A bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908,' it shall be in order to consider as an amendment thereto the following: 'When the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not thereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine, but nothing in this provision shall affect the retired list.'"

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the resolution I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me hardly necessary to spend any time in explanation of this rule. The amendment suggested, abolishing the office of Lieutenant-General when the next vacancy occurs, was part of the text of the Army bill as it was reported to the House from the Committee on Military Affairs. When that portion of the bill was reached, a point of order was made that it was new legislation, and the point of order was sustained and the paragraph went out.

It seems to the committee that in submitting this rule they are simply furnishing the House an opportunity to put into legislation what has heretofore been declared to be the will of the House. There is no doubt that there is an almost unanimous consensus of opinion that the amendment ought to be adopted. This was evidenced by the action of the House at the last session of Congress, when, although it refused to pass such an amendment because it would then have applied to two major-generals who had been designated to fill the place, it did subsequently pass in a special bill substantially the same provision that is now submitted. I believe that there is an opinion prevailing that it was a mistake to create the office of Lieutenant-General for any officer after the death of General Sheridan; that the distinction should have been confined to Generals Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. But as often as one officer after another of the civil war attained to the position where he would be entitled to this place, if it was to be created, Congress felt it would be unfair to deprive him of what his predecessors had had. The reason that existed for giving this distinction to these officers has now ceased to exist. All the officers of the civil war who would be entitled by reason of their seniority to become Lieutenant-Generals have been provided for, and if the office is to continue it will be conferred hereafter upon those who have had no connection with the civil war.

I want to say here, while I am on the floor, it is a great mistake to assume, as I have heard it assumed on the outside, that this measure is aimed at the interest of some or any Army officer. The measure is intended, I think, by the House to be passed as a measure of justice, because the reason existing for the creation of the office has ceased, and the office should likewise cease with the reason. The legislation has no particular party or parties in view.

I am ready to yield time to any gentleman who desires it. If no one desires time, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 21202. An act fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same; and

S. 7372. An act to authorize the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy, as a gift, of a sailboat for use of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy; and

S. R. 81. Joint resolution authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7372. An act to authorize the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy, as a gift, of a sailboat for use of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 6578. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1895, and to amend an act amendatory thereof approved June 20, 1906—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 7295. An act granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6828. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter D. Greene—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6823. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Holsey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6587. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcus M. Currier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6145. An act granting an increase of pension to Enoch Bolles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6137. An act granting an increase of pension to Fannie L. Pike—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6656. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli M. Skinner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 7384. An act granting an increase of pension to Orson B. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. R. 81. Joint resolution authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21202. An act fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same; and

H. R. 21951. An act to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in the State of Alabama.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army apprpriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, under authority of the rule just adopted, I move to insert the following on page 5, after the word "dollars," in line 16:

Provided, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not thereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine: Provided further, That nothing in this provision shall affect the retired list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that probably the point of order pending should be disposed of before this amendment is offered; but without objection, the Chair will entertain the amendment now.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to hear that amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not yet been read. The Clerk will report the amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 16, insert the following:
"Provided, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not thereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine: Provided further, That nothing in this provision shall apply to the retired list."

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not that apply to the existing law?

Mr. HULL. It does apply to those who are on the active list but does not apply to those on the retired list and does not apply to General MacArthur, who will go on the retired list in 1909.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that specifically covered?

Mr. HULL. I think it is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There can be no promotion?

Mr. HULL. After General MacArthur goes out there can be no other promotion on the active list.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no promotion of men on the retired list.

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the understanding, that men on the retired list can not be promoted.

Mr. HULL. There has never been any promotion upon the retired list except by act of Congress and can not be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 84, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order that was under discussion at the hour of adjournment last evening, I desire to submit the following full information on the point suggested by the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, January 10, 1907.

HON. A. T. HULL,
Chairman of Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry I have the honor to inform you that allotments made in the past of funds for the construction of barracks, quarters, and other quartermaster buildings for the Coast Artillery have been made in the same manner as have such allotments for the construction of similar structures for the cavalry and infantry. That is, for buildings costing more than $20,000 each allotments have been made from the appropriation for military posts, carried on the sundry civil bill, and for buildings costing less than $20,000 each allotments have been made from the appropriation for barracks and quarters carried on the Army appropriation bill.

Very respectfully,

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman wants anything further I simply add that that carries out my contention that the Committee on Military Affairs has only attempted to segregate the authorizations of these buildings, and it does not change the method of building or the character of buildings heretofore carried in the appropriation bills covered by barracks and quarters at posts in the two bills in which such items are carried.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, whatever the practice of the Department has been with respect to the expenditure of the appropriations for barracks and quarters is not material in the discussion or consideration of the point of order that is now before the Chair. I wish to give the Chair some information respecting the history of appropriations for barracks and quarters for the seacoast artillery. The first appropriation that Congress ever authorized for this purpose was in 1896. It was carried in the fortifications appropriation bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations, under the head of "Gun and mortar batteries:"

For the construction of fortifications, $2,500,000, of which sum not exceeding $100,000 may be expended for the construction of necessary buildings connected therewith.

That was the first appropriation made for buildings in connection with the coast defenses of the United States in recent years. Following that, Congress felt that there ought to be some limitation placed upon the Department in the expenditure of appropriations for this purpose, and the next year the fortifications bill carried the following provision:

That prior to any expenditure of money for the construction of necessary buildings connected with the new fortifications, except that already authorized, the Secretary of War shall report to Congress, on or before December 6, 1897, the most practicable and economical plan for the care and preservation of the fortifications and their armament, said plans to be based upon the authorized strength of the artillery force of the Army.

Then later, in the sundry civil bill, they placed this limitation:

For the construction of buildings at, and the enlargement of, such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, and for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense, $620,000, and of this sum $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase of suitable building sites: Provided, That for the erection of barracks and quarters for artillery in connection with the project adopted for seacoast defense there shall not hereafter be expended at any one point more than $60,000 for a one-battery post, and $20,000 additional for each additional battery, from any appropriation made by Congress, unless special authority of Congress be granted for a greater expenditure.

Following that, in 1901, Congress adopted this further limitation:

Provided, That for the erection of barracks and quarters for artillery, in connection with the project adopted for seacoast defense, there shall not hereafter be expended at any one point more than $1,200 per man for each man required for one relief to man the guns at the post, up to eighty-three men, the present permanent strength of a battery enlisted and commissioned, and for each man required beyond this number, $600 per man, from any appropriation made by Congress, unless special authority of Congress be granted for a greater expenditure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from the time Congress first made appropriations for barracks and quarters for our Seacoast Artillery the Committee on Appropriations has always received the estimate for that purpose under the rule of the House which expressly provides that all estimates for that purpose shall be reported to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee have taken that jurisdiction and exercised it and invariably reported the appropriations for barracks and quarters in a fortification bill or in a sundry civil bill. So far as the bill is concerned, it is not material. The question here is as to whether or not the Committee on Military Affairs, under the rules of this House, have jurisdiction of the appropriations and estimates for appropriations for our seacoast defense. It would be just as competent for the Military Committee to bring in appropriations here for our seacoast batteries and our fortifications. Jurisdiction over subjects pertaining to fortifications and our seacoast defenses has never been surrendered by, nor has it ever been taken away from, the Committee on Appropriations.

Another point I want to make, Mr. Chairman: Under the language of this amendment the entire amount may be spent at one place and may be spent for one building. There is absolutely no limitation that would apply. The limitation which now exists in the law, carried in the fortifications bill and later in the sundry civil bill, would not apply in any way whatever to this, because the appropriation for barracks and quarters, to which this limitation applies, reads:

In connection with the project adopted for seacoast defenses.

That is a limitation that is carried with every appropriation reported by the Committee on Appropriations for barracks and quarters for the Seacoast Artillery. The appropriation must be for that purpose, and the limitation then applies. Under the language of this amendment the existing limitation would not apply. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that, under the rules of the House, the estimates for this purpose are referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee have heretofore exercised that jurisdiction, and that jurisdiction ought to be maintained and preserved.

I maintain that it is in keeping with good administration and good policy to separate, as far as we possibly can, the cost of maintaining the Army and the cost of our coast defense and all new construction incident thereto.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been fully presented to the Chair from the standpoint of the right to embrace these items, under the rules, in the sundry civil bill. Of course it is within the discretion of the Committee on Appropriations to assign the items which belong to that committee to such bills as it may deem best. So that if the jurisdiction as to this item has heretofore generally been exercised in either the fortifications appropriation bill or the sundry civil bill, that would throw light upon the interpretation of the rule. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs says that if his committee had not inserted the statement that these barracks and quarters were for the Seacoast Artillery, perchance no point of order would have been lodged, and that his committee is, so to speak, being punished for its candor with the House. I want to say that I think his committee is to be complimented on its candor with the House; I want to say that I think his committee is to be complimented on the efforts made this year to hereafter secure a suitable segregation of the items in the army bill. And yet I feel sure that the gentleman would not wish to be understood as saying that he regretted the fact that he had been candid with the House and wished that he had covered up this appropriation so that no point would have been made upon it at all. I know he does not mean that.

Now, let us turn first to the rules, and then I want to call the Chair's attention to the report upon which these rules was originally adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Part of Rule XI, section 3, is as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz:

"3. To the appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, viz, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; to the Committee on Appropriations."

The provision with reference to the jurisdiction of the Military Committee reads "to the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs."

What is a part of the coast defense? I read from the report of William R. Morrison, in presenting to the House the rule which gave to the Military Committee jurisdiction over the Army bill:

In 1847 appropriations were made in nine separate bills, viz: Army, civil and diplomatic, deficiencies, fortifications, Indian, Military Academy, Navy, pensions, and post-office.

Thus for more than sixty years one of the recognized and distinct bills making appropriations has been the fortifications appropriation bills.

Again Mr. Morrison says:

The fortifications bill being one relating generally to the army and navy fortifications and the general public defense is left to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, this being the general public defense by both the Army and the Navy of the coast of the United States is left to the Committee on Appropriations. Under this rule what jurisdiction has the Military Affairs Committee ever exercised? Has it ever for a moment claimed that it could buy a site on which to build these barracks? Oh, no. Every proposition since the division of these appropriations to purchase a site for these barracks in connection with seacoast defenses has gone to and come from the Committee on Appropriations. Is it claimed that they have any jurisdiction over the building of houses, magazines to house the ammunition for use of seacoast defense? Oh, no; no such pretense; no such jurisdiction ever attempted to be exercised. Has it been claimed that they have charge of auxiliaries of coast defenses, like the fire control? Yes; but repudiated by the chairman in the last session of this Congress, and the Chair has from the beginning sustained the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee over all the adjuncts and accessories of the seacoast defense. Can it be said in any justice or reason that when one committee has been charged from the beginning with the whole care of the defense of the coast, that it is any more within its jurisdiction to provide houses for the ammunition than to provide houses for the men who handle the ammunition? What fine distinction is this which the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs seeks to impress upon you when it must be conceded that this committee never had jurisdiction to buy a site and never exercised it for barracks or quarters at a seacoast defense; never had and never has exercised any authority to appropriate money to build houses in which to place the ammunition, but has authority to build a house in which to put the men? I submit that everything which is accessory to or an adjunct of the fortification for the seacoast defense belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, and not to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the importance of this question impels me to again intrude myself and speak for a little time upon the questions that have been submitted this morning. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations claims that all the buildings at seacoast defense have been carried by the sundry civil bill, when the positive evidence is submitted to the House this morning that that statement is not correct and that the line of demarcation between the two has been carried out in the appropriations heretofore on this seacoast matter just as it is in all other posts of the country. In other words, when the separation of the committees came the Committee on Appropriations kept jurisdiction of all buildings costing more than $20,000 and were supposed to appropriate for them under the law that has existed for so many years, requiring detailed estimates and specific appropriations. The gentleman carries the appropriation in his bill for military posts. Included in that are buildings for seacoast defense, but it does not carry it in such a way as to compel the authorities here to expend the money so much at seacoast defense and so much at other military posts. Under his appropriation, as it has been heretofore under ours, the Department could appropriate all the money for interior posts or all of it for seacoast defenses and still comply with the law. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How does the gentleman construe this language in the present sundry civil appropriation law, which has been the law for many years, so as to justify the statement that the Department can use this money that is appropriated from the Committee on Appropriations for the building of barracks and quarters at interior posts:

For the construction and enlargement of buildings at such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with adopted projects for seacoast defense, and for the purchase of suitable building sites for said barracks and quarters.

Now, that money must be expended necessarily for barracks and quarters for Seacoast Artillery.

Mr. HULL. It would not be necessarily so. They would have the power under that appropriation to expend all of the appropriations for any one of the items specified, and say they did not need anything for the other objects mentioned this year. It is the same language we have heretofore used as to post barracks and quarters wherever they were needed—a lump sum by which the Department could direct the amount to any particular locality. We tried this year to separate, so as to have so much for one line of barracks and quarters and so much for another. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] raises the proposition as to the fortification bill being one of the old established bills of the country. Nobody disputes that proposition. He says that that committee has had jurisdiction over fortifications and coast defenses. What does that include? It includes the forts; it includes the batteries; it includes the casemates for the care of ammunition; it includes all the fixed part that is actually used in the defense of the country, and nothing else.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Has it not always included all the sites on which barracks and quarters were erected?

Mr. HULL. Yes; but if that were properly construed under the rules it would require legislation before you would be authorized to purchase. It has never been required.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But it has been the invariable practice.

Mr. HULL. But practice does not overcome law, and in my judgment, if we were to come to a strict construction of the rules of this House, it would require legislation in every case of that kind. We have never done it; we have never claimed it; but we do claim this: That when you get beyond the fortifications and coast defense proper you have no more jurisdiction over the buildings to house the men than you would have over the buildings to house the men at any other post in the country. If the gentleman claims that the care of the men carries with it jurisdiction to the Committee on Appropriations, why does he not claim, then, the clothing for the men to make them comfortable? Why doesn't he claim the food for the men? He says that without houses you could not have an army. Without an army you can not have any effective coast defense. You can erect your batteries, you can put up your casemates, but the gentleman must have an army of artillerymen there to make it effective, just as much as he must have houses. And yet gentlemen will hardly claim that they have the right to increase or diminish the Army as the Committee on Naval Affairs would have the right to increase or diminish the Navy. There are two jurisdictions here. The evidence is conclusive that during all the years we have been making these appropriations the smaller buildings carried in our bill have been erected for coast fortifications and for the other posts indiscriminately, and these buildings are not part under any construction that can be made for the housing of the Army of what is called "coast fortifications." They are simply for the care of the Army. To assume that they have absolute jurisdiction over that would be to assume that they have absolute jurisdiction over the number of men who should compose the artillery force of the Army, the amount of clothing that should be allowed them, the amount of food that should be given. It would be just as reasonable in the one case as the other. I want to correct the gentleman on fire control. We claimed fire control on field batteries, and we got it in place of being turned down.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And you claimed Seacoast Artillery also and lost out.

Mr. HULL. Well, we did not feel that we lost anything; but this other proposition, Mr. Chairman, goes to the very heart of the question of the power of two committees to proceed on the lines they have been doing without friction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is unfortunate that the jurisdiction of these two committees is not clearly defined in the rules. As it is, the only guide the Chair has is the course pursued in regard to this particular appropriation in the past. The fact that before the Army appropriation bill was taken away from the Committee on Appropriations and given to the Committee on Military Affairs it carried nothing except for the maintenance of the Army affords little light on this question, since it has been the invariable practice of the Military Committee, since given jurisdiction of the Army appropriation bill, to appropriate for barracks and quarters. Had this item been carried in the fortifications bill there would probably have been little controversy about it, but if the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction, then for the purposes of this case it matters not in what bill reported by that committee the item is carried. The rules provide that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction of fortifications and coast defenses. The construction of seacoast fortifications is clearly the province of the Committee on Appropriations under this rule. Are not the barracks at the fortifications a part thereof? So far as the Chair is informed, the Army appropriation bill has never, until the bill under consideration was presented, carried in specific terms any appropriation for barracks for Seacoast Artillery. That has alway been carried in a bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The fortifications appropriation bill approved March 3, 1896, which was after the adoption of the so-called "Endicott project," carried an appropriation for the erection of necessary buildings connected with the new fortifications. In the fortifications bill for the next year this provision was carried in the following language:

That prior to any expenditure of money for the construction of necessary buildings connected with the new fortifications, etc.—

Congress apparently recognizing the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations over this subject. The next year the appropriation for this purpose was included in the sundry civil appropriation bill in the following language:

For the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense.

And it has been carried every year since in the sundry civil appropriation bill down to and including the first session of this Congress, when the language was as follows:

For the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense.

The fact that the War Department may have used some of the money carried in the Army appropriation bill for barracks for seacoast artillery without any specific instruction from Congress so to do can not affect the question of jurisdiction under consideration. In an exhaustive and able opinion delivered by Mr. Speaker Henderson on February 1, 1900, involving a somewhat similar provision on the question of jurisdiction between the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations, he said:

During this period many bitter contests have arisen between the two committees on this subject of jurisdiction, and each time the final decision of the matter has been in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

These decisions were made in relation to subjects which the Appropriations Committee claimed were, and had been, properly part of the fortifications bill. In this case all the conditions are the same, except that the items in dispute are claimed for the sundry civil bill.

While acting as Chairman in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, decisions favorable to the Committee on Appropriations have been made by Messrs. Blount, of Georgia; Payson, of Illinois; HOPKINS, of Illinois, and Springer, of Illinois. Mr. Allen, of Michigan, while in the chair, made a different ruling, but the House promptly, on motion of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, sustained the claim of the Committee on Appropriations by striking the paragraph in controversy from the Army bill. Many days have been spent in discussions of the question, one struggle lasting for two entire days, and another struggle for three entire days, but always resulting in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, whether the decision was made by a Chairman, or by the Committee of the Whole House, or by the House itself.

The several controversies that have taken place were for the purpose of maintaining the individuality of the fortifications bill, and also of the Army bill. Each of the great appropriation bills has an individuality which it has retained for about thirty years and which the House has shown itself reluctant to violate. For instance, the Appropriations Committee is given under the rule jurisdiction of the subject of "fortifications and coast defenses." Field guns for the use of the Army would scarcely seem to properly belong to this committee, but it has been decided repeatedly that the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction of the subject of field guns, because their fabrication for a long term of years belonged to the fortifications appropriation bill. For the same reason the Committee on Appropriations has been given and held jurisdiction of Watervliet Arsenal, where heavy guns are made.

In view of the fact that up to this time the Committee on Appropriations has invariably claimed and exercised without objection the right to appropriate in express terms for the construction of barracks for seacoast fortifications, and until this bill was presented the Committee on Military Affairs has not attempted to so appropriate, the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses of recruiting" and the transportation of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots and the transportation of persons on their discharge from the United States military prison to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster's stores, from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; hereafter estimates shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States covering transportation of the Army and its supplies in one estimate, and additional estimates shall be submitted covering other items heretofore carried in appropriation bills under the head of transportation of the Army and its supplies; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train masters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; and hereafter no steamship in the transport service of the United States shall be sold or disposed of without the consent of Congress having been first had or obtained; for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service, $13,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be applied to the payment of the expenses of using transports in any other Government work than the transportation of the Army, its supplies and employees; and when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, accommodations are available, transportation may be provided for the officers, enlisted men, employees, and supplies of the Navy, the Marine Corps, and for members and employees of the Philippine and Hawaiian governments, and without expense to the United States, for the families of those persons herein authorized to be transported: Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated $725,000 shall be expended for boats for the seacoast artillery service.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order on the last two provisos, beginning on line 1, page 35, after the word "Army," down to and including the word "service" on line 10. I desire to ask the gentleman if that is not an entirely new provision in respect to the use of transports and also in respect to the appropriation of $750,000 to be expended for boats for the Coast Artillery service. I wanted to know particularly about the first part of that, whether the gentleman thinks he has limited the use of the Army transports so as to prevent the abuse of the service.

Mr. HULL. The only change in the provision from last year is that under the appropriation last year we gave the Navy and the Marine Corps the same rights for the use of the transports that we gave the Army, and we found that the Marine Corps and Navy have been availing themselves of that provision to such an extent that the transports have been unable to do the business required of them for the Army in the transportation of its supplies. This changes it by making the transportation of the supplies of the Army first in importance, and permits the Secretary of War to extend its service to the other branches of the service when there is a sufficient capacity to do their business too. In other words, under the old provision the Army was bearing the expense of paying for the transportation of its own supplies by private lines, and was then compelled to care for the other branch of the service under the Army bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, could the gentleman give us anything definite as to what the purpose of this $725,000 is—whether it is ordinary transportation of the Seacoast Artillery or whether it is for some purpose in connection with the seacoast defense?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that it has nothing to do with the seacoast defense, judging from this document and what the Quartermaster-General says; that it is in the torpedo service, and in the transportation from one place to another of the mobile forces of the Army, and the Quartermaster Department is now charged with it under "Transportation of the Army and supplies;" that the use of a large boat in that line is more expensive than the use of a small one, and it is claimed it will be a matter of economy.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman remembers that last year it was ruled that his committee had no jurisdiction over torpedo planters, for example? Now, is this meant to cover just that kind of thing?

Mr. HULL. I should think it was meant to cover everything that the Army is now charged with doing under the head of "Transportation of Army and supplies," and nothing beyond that, from what the Quartermaster-General says. The hearing is very brief on it. I regarded it as possibly subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. How do you arrive at the amount that will be required?

Mr. HULL. The estimate submitted was for $900,000, but a supplemental estimate has been made, asking that the amount be reduced from $900,000 to $725,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. How large a vessel do they propose to build?

Mr. HULL. It would be a vessel of very good size, a well-equipped seagoing vessel, but not a large vessel, or it would cost more than the amount provided.

Mr. TAWNEY. This means the purchase of an additional transport vessel.

Mr. HULL. It would mean the purchase of a vessel which would cost less in operation for fuel and complement of officers and men; a vessel that they could use for this work for which the larger vessel is now used.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist upon the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to offer the following new proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "service," line 10, page 35, insert the following: "For the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of a board of road commissioners described in section 27 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $250,000, to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $475,000: Provided, That the following sums may be used in the erection of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Fifty thousand dollars at Fort Douglas, Utah; $60,000 at San Juan, P. R.; $45,000 at Fort Mackenzie, Wyo.; $35,000 at Whipple Barracks, Ariz.; $35,000 at Fort Riley, Kans.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order as to the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will not be offered until the point of order is disposed of. The amendment may be read. Will the gentleman from New York please give the Chair his attention. The amendment may be read for information, but it will not be acted upon until the point of order is disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the reconstruction and repair of the power house pertaining to the general hospital on the Presidio Military Reservation, San Francisco, Cal., $30,000.

Mr. HULL. Here is a specific sum named by the Congress of the United States. The only question that has ever been raised as to the proposition of appropriating for larger sums in the Army bill than the $20,000 is that there was no specific estimate made first, and second, that all of the specific appropriations for more than $20,000 for one building have been made by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I think, when it comes to hospitals, that the Committee on Military Affairs has always carried that item, and the Committee on Appropriations has never had jurisdiction over hospitals. Whenever the question has been raised, the uniform practice has been that they were carried in the Army appropriation bill. Now, I will read the law on that subject:

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress.

That has been done by the Department to the Committee on Military Affairs.

And approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures the cost of which shall exceed $20,000 shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

The committee has reported this without getting special authority to construct this hospital. In the original organization of these bills, when the posts were small and widely scattered on the frontier, $20,000 was ample for the construction of a hospital at the different posts. That day has passed, and the time has come when in order to have a modern hospital Congress must recognize that it requires more than $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not this the fact—that this provision authorizes the construction of the hospital and at the same time appropriates for that purpose? Now, the fact that these hospitals are not authorized by law makes that out of order under the rules. Why is it that the Committee on Military Affairs, having jurisdiction of the subject, does not report a specific bill authorizing the construction, and then follow in the appropriation bill with the appropriation?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it does not carry with it that proposition. The law does not say that these must be previously authorized, but that no greater amount shall be expended for one building unless specifically authorized by Congress. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if his construction were to be taken we could not appropriate for a single building in either the sundry civil or military bill for posts if there had to be legislation before we make the appropriation. The Committee on Military Affairs has the power to legislate; the Appropriations Committee has not. His construction would absolutely destroy the appropriaton in both bills for military posts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this law is just as binding on one committee as it is on the other.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The intention of this provision is to permit the erection of modern sanitary hospitals within the limit of cost specified herein?

Mr. HULL. That is right—without increasing the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that there is no limit of cost fixed upon the hospitals authorized in this provision. It simply provides that certain specified sums may be used in the erection of modern sanitary hospitals at certain posts. If this provision be enacted in the present shape, it will be possible for the Department to use the amount allowed in the fiscal year for which it is authorized for the purpose specified, and then to come to Congress for an additional appropriation to complete the work.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that if we can reach that stage of the proceedings I am perfectly willing to amend it so that it will read:

For the erection and completion.

So that there will be a limitation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My principal object in reserving the point of order was to direct the gentleman's attention to that fact, and to have him, if he deemed it advisable, so shape the language that there would be a limit of cost upon the proposed hospitals.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why not provide that not more than this sum may be used?

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that it would be necessary to complete the buildings within the specified sums.

Mr. HULL. Why not make it read this way:

Provided, That not to exceed the following sums may be used in the erection and completion.

That would absolutely cover both points.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is more satisfactory. There is one other point about which I wish to inquire. Are these hospitals to be erected at any posts which it is intended to abandon as military posts in the near future?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is, absolutely not. And when that question was raised in the Committee on Military Affairs they eliminated all such places, and these posts are supposed to be permanent posts. If I believed that the scheme of the Department was to abandon these posts in a few years, I should oppose granting them a penny for additional buildings; but that question was asked, and it was understood that other hospitals that they desired appropriations for were eliminated from the Surgeon-General's request, on the ground, first, that they were not of so much importance, and, second, that they might not be permanent posts.

Mr. MANN. Now, I understand the gentleman to claim that this item is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HULL. I will claim that if the point is made.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to argue that this item was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HULL. If the point was made I should resist it to the best of my ability.

Mr. MANN. Irrespective of what the gentleman believes?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; the question of belief is one I hope we will not go into.

Mr. MANN. Because if the gentleman thought this was not subject to a point of order, what was the object in putting it in the bill?

Mr. HULL. My judgment is that it is impossible, unless you specifically appropriate for the erection of buildings costing more than $20,000, to build them under either bill.

Mr. MANN. That would make it subject to the point of order.

Mr. HULL. You must have a specific amount in the bill to comply with the law.

Mr. MANN. That would be changing the law, and so would make it subject to the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I think not, under the law, because the law provides that you may do that.

Mr. MANN. The law provides that you can not build a building, except under certain circumstances, to exceed $20,000 in cost.

Mr. CAPRON. But the circumstances are all there.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not raise the point, because, to be frank with him, it would very badly demoralize our whole system of appropriations. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York withdraws his point of order, I want to offer these amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I move to amend, on page 26——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 23, after the word "Kansas," insert:
"For the reconstruction and repair of the power house pertaining to the general hospital on the Presidio Military Reservation, San Francisco, Cal., $30,000.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] just agreed to offer another amendment ahead of this.

Mr. HULL. The Chair ruled me out, on the ground that there was one amendment pending.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment was pending.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order——

Mr. KAHN. It is too late to raise the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not too late; I reserved the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order. The power house at the general hospital on the Presidio in San Francisco is, perhaps, the most important part of that hospital. It was seriously wrecked in the earthquake of April 18 last, but at that time it had become inadequate to the wants of the hospital. Four new buildings had been constructed, and a consequent increased demand for steam and electricity has resulted. This power plant furnishes not only the light, the electricity, and heat, but enables the cooking to be done in the kitchen. It runs the ice machine and refrigerator plant and operates the sterilizers and disinfecting apparatus. It is, as has been said by one officer, the very heart of that hospital. I have here an extract from a letter written by Lieutenant-Colonel Torney, in command there, in which he says:

My anxiety concerning the power plant will not be relieved until the funds are appropriated for its rehabilitation. It is, as you know, the very heart of the hospital, and in its crippled condition it requires a great deal of care to keep it in good running order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the Department submitted an estimate for these repairs?

Mr. KAHN. Not until after this bill had been reported.

Mr. HULL. Yes; in this way: They estimated $165,000 for general repairs, including this. The idea of this amendment is to insure its being expended there. I think it would be expended, but it is included in the $165,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then this would not increase the appropriation?

Mr. HULL. Not at all; it is carried in the amount that we figured on, only there was no specific amount. The estimate was carried as the repair of the house at the Presidio and improvements at other posts. This simply segregates it and does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Will this complete the work?

Mr. HULL. I think it would if added now. The gentleman is skilled in the construction of language. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. MANN. That was the reason I asked whether it was intended to complete the work.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; the $30,000 will complete it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was the item estimated for by the Department?

Mr. HULL. Yes; it was put in the estimate submitted to us.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 36, line 17, after the word "that," by inserting the words "not to exceed;" so it will read, "not to exceed the following sum."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 36, line 17, after the word "that," by inserting the words "not to exceed;" so that it will read, "not to exceed the following sum."

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that that will not cover the case, because that means not to exceed——

Mr. HULL. If this is adopted, I mean to offer another amendment, in line 18, for the erection and completion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 18, after the word "erection," by inserting the words "and completion."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, after the word "erection," insert the words "and completion."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 36, amend by adding: "Provided further, That the hospital at Bayard, New Mexico, for the treatment of tuberculosis shall be open to treatment of officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps."

Mr. MANN. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will reserve it and not make it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the hospital at Fort Bayard is used for the treatment of officers and men of the Army who are suffering from tuberculosis. This amendment merely proposes to extend the benefits of that hospital to the officers and men of the Navy and the Marine Corps, with the idea that it will provide accommodation for the men who need it and obviate the necessity at a later period of the erection of another hospital, a duplication of this at Fort Bayard.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman could make it even stronger than that. His modesty prevents him. We have an Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., for certain cases. That obviates each branch of the service having that character of a separate hospital. They have this hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis at Fort Bayard that is ample to treat all who may suffer from this disease from the three branches of the service, and unless it is extended to include the other two you will be called upon to vote $250,000 to establish another tuberculosis hospital for the other two arms of the service. It seems to me, and to the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, that there is no reason why these special hospitals for the treatment of special diseases not of general character, should be erected, when one hospital with one administration can do all the work. If this proviso is inserted here it will fix the fact that the Fort Bayard hospital is open to the Army and Marine Corps and to the Navy on the same terms with the Army, and will obviate any necessity at least for the erection of additional hospitals for the treatment of cases of tuberculosis. That is all there is to it. It is to save the expense of building other hospitals for each of the arms of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the RECORD of this morning some discussion was raised as to the item on page 31 for military post-exchange appropriation. Some questions were asked by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and some discussion raised in connection with that paragraph. I would like to say to the House that some years ago—I think it was two Congresses ago—I introduced a bill doing away with the anticanteen provision. At the time I did so the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], assured me that the military post exchange, together with the appropriations that had been made for that purpose, would do away with any necessity for the former canteen.

Mr. HULL. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. Did I not say that I hoped so? The gentleman ought not to make it quite so strong.

Mr. MORRELL. Well, the gentleman seemed so confident as to the result that I refrained on that occasion from introducing the bill which I did a little while afterwards. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of this committee what has been the result, as proven by experience, as to whether the post exchange on the lines he suggested has brought about what he expected?

Mr. HULL. We are still providing the posts with post exchanges and furnishing hot coffee, with the hope that it will do all that is desired.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask whether the proportionate decrease of drunkenness in the Army has been commensurate with the number of post exchanges of the new kind provided for in the various appropriations?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that question is not before Congress, and I am not on the witness stand. I will say frankly to the gentleman that the testimony of Army officers is almost uniform and universal that the canteen was a good temperance measure; that its abolition has resulted in desertions and greater drunkenness. That is their testimony. I am also informed by letters ranging all the way from ten to one hundred a day, distributed all over the country, that the canteen would be a crime against society, and protesting against this reenactment. We are trying to let the present line work out, and if the effect ultimately is bad on the Army the facts can be presented to Congress and it can be legislated on, but it is not now before Congress.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that that may be true, but if the increase of drunkenness in the Army continues at the rate which is very well known throughout the country and acknowledged, it may become a very serious matter in preventing men from enlisting in the Army and greatly increase desertion and arrests by civil authorities. As I understand it, the trouble is to-day to get the proper kind of men to enlist in the Army and to stop the epidemic of desertion. I call attention to this fact purely in the cause of temperance. It is not because I want men to indulge in spirituous liquor and riotous behavior that I advocate returning to the canteen, but it is absolutely and purely in the cause of temperance, and if by insisting on this canteen law we are going to drive men out of the Army posts to low dives instead of doing what we expected to accomplish, we are doing exactly the reverse of what was desired to be accomplished. In a bill which I had the honor to introduce in the first session of this Congress in the preamble to that bill I called the attention of the House to the testimony that had been given in the report of the War Department in regard to the effect of the abolition of the canteen. If an amendment is in order, I would like to offer an amendment repealing that section of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I would say to the gentleman that it would not be in order.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean to tell this House the reason for lack of enlistment is on account of the abolition of the canteen?

Mr. MORRELL. I would say in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it may not be the direct cause, but I think I can safely say that it is one of the indirect causes why fathers and mothers do not want their sons to go into the Army when the son, no matter what his standing is at home, because he does not wear a strap on his shoulder but wears a stripe on the sleeve of his coat, does not have the same privileges and confidence reposed in him as a man as the soldier who has the strap on the point of his shoulder. Who are they who stand in the front rank of the firing line or behind the big guns of the Army and Navy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that time extended to five minutes so I may ask another question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want to conclude his remarks?

Mr. MORRELL. I only asked for two minutes. I think, Mr. Chairman, as I remarked on the occasion when I first introduced the bill, that it is an invidious distinction to make between the officer and the enlisted man. I believe the enlisted man is just as much entitled to be intrusted with discrimination as the officer, and I feel that that is one of the things that deters a man from entering the service, when he feels that his rights are not observed as a man and that he is not given equal privileges with the men who wear the straps on their shoulders, provided he respects himself. Now, we certainly know that drunkenness and desertion is increasing in the Army. It is the testimony of officers of the Army of all grades that this has been the result since the abolishment of the canteen. Why, may I ask? Because men are driven from the Army posts to low dives outside the reservations to drink. They will drink, a great many of them, unfortunately, and it is impossible to prevent them from drinking, particularly when they are treated like children and told that they must not drink, and when they get leave of absence they go beyond the military reservations and go to these places of low resort and drink to excess, with the result that they overstay their leave and then they desert or get in some disgraceful row and, fearing punishment, desert.

Mr. GREENE. I would like to ask the gentleman if there are not other conditions existing in all parts of this country that prevent the enlistment of soldiers in the Army and also men in the Navy—if the business conditions are not more largely responsible for it than the abolishment of the canteen?

Mr. MORRELL. I did not say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, that that was the sole and only cause. I said it was one of the causes. I quite agree with the gentleman that the principal cause probably is that the men of our Army and Navy do not get remuneration commensurate with their services compared with what is obtained in civil life. That probably is the primary cause, but I still say that I think the abolishment of the canteen is one of the causes, and is certainly responsible, in my judgment—poor as it may probably be, but nevertheless backed up by the report of the War Department—that it is the cause of a great deal of the increase of drunkenness and desertion in the Army at the present day.

The same results follow out in our local city conditions. No sane man who has studied the effects of high license would again willingly return to the conditions which prevailed when a saloon was at every street corner and adulterated liquors were sold by irresponsible proprietors.

Treat the American soldier in this respect as you would any American in any of the walks of civil life; teach him that he is respected and trusted, place him among elevating surroundings, and he will very soon learn to appreciate that confidence and respect himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment, without objection, will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the nurse corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances, as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $622,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on page 38, line 4—the words "regulation, or contract."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order against the proviso beginning in line 4, page 38.

Mr. MANN. No; just the words ahead of the proviso, namely, "regulation, or contract." You now provide by law for medical attendance for everybody connected with the Army, which means, of course, medical attendance that may be authorized by law; but in this proposition you increase that and make it read "when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract." Is the purpose of that to extend——

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that that is to cover the case where we employ a contract surgeon, or where we contract for any line of employment, and in the contract with the party agree to give him medical attendance.

Mr. MANN. Already in the bill you have——

Mr. HULL. The language of the bill, I think, the gentleman, if he will look at it, will see after the word "treatment"——

Mr. MANN. You put that in in the place of what you had before. Contract surgeons were carried in the existing law. You strike out "contract surgeons" and insert "contract?"

Mr. HULL. The regulation or contract has the force of law. Now, the new language we put in which changes conditions is not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, and they do give it in private hospitals now, and it requires two different parties to make the payment.

Mr. MANN. I made no point of order upon the proviso, but if it is already authorized by law—the regulation or contract—then there is no need of it going into this bill.

Mr. HULL. If it does not go in this bill, none of this appropriation could be paid for that purpose. There is one class that is authorized by law. We name "already authorized by law." There is another under the regulation of the War Department entitled to treatment, and we name them, so it can be paid. Then there is another, by contract, and we name that.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that by law they had the right to make such a regulation or such a contract, and if that be the case then that is a matter provided for by law.

Mr. HULL. The law specifically enumerates certain parties that are entitled to this. The regulations have extended that law. Under the general law, regulations when not contrary to law have the effect of law, and then in making specific contracts by which they pay a man so much per month it is part of his contract that he shall have attendance. The only change of the law, as I understand it, is the proviso.

Mr. MANN. I have in mind a certain case where a very distinguished officer—or a very high officer and, I apprehend, distinguished—was not only ordered almost all the way around the world for medical treatment, but also was allowed travel pay for that distance, and, as I understand, afterwards travel pay was canceled.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, it seems to me there ought to be some limitation in the law as to cases of that sort.

Mr. HULL. This has nothing to do with his travel pay.

Mr. MANN. If an officer can be ordered from the Philippines to the United States under a regulation, and then ordered from the United States to London under a regulation, and in accordance with the regulation be allowed his travel pay besides, and get his medical treatment free, and be paid a very large sum of money for taking it, I think the law ought to be guarded.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me simply to suggest to him that the last Army appropriation bill provided specifically that no officer of the Army should have mileage when traveling on the ocean, and that a man ordered to Europe, ordered to South America, ordered from one part of this country to any foreign nation, or to the Philippines or to Porto Rico, must have only his actual expenses, so that such a case of abuse as the gentleman refers to has been cured by law.

Mr. MANN. So far as travel pay is concerned.

Mr. HULL. So far as mileage is concerned.

Mr. MANN. But has it been cured so far as the other is concerned, or, under the language of the gentleman, may not other abuses grow up just as bad as to medical attendance, not to officers of the Army, as they are already provided for——

Mr. HULL. I should say not.

Mr. MANN (continuing). But civilian employees. Suppose you make a contract by which you provide medical attendance for every employee in the War Department at Washington. Is that the intention of Congress?

Mr. HULL. No; we provided specifically, and the Surgeon-General, in his statement, says that this is to cover and only cover cases where there are recruits going from one place to another who are taken sick, in order to give them that attendance; and the committee in order to prevent any officer getting any medical attendance, except when in line of duty, put in further, it shall not apply to any officer on furlough or any officer being treated by private physicians when on furlough, in hospitals, or by private physicians.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the gentleman is correct in his statement as to what this officer says is the effect of the language, and that it is only intended to apply to so and so. But that officer is soon out of the service, and a new officer reads the meaning as it is stated in the language in the statute book.

Mr. HULL. The language referred to is substantially as it has been in the bill for many years.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. HULL. The language which the gentleman refers to is in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. HULL. Now, in that connection, General O'Reilly in his statement here says:

That is in the direction of administrative simplicity. A recruiting or traveling party may have a man who is taken sick away from a military post and sent to a private hospital. As it is now, we only pay for attendance, medicines, and nurses in the hospital, but we can not pay board, which is chargeable to the Subsistence Department. The hospitals are not in the habit of making out bills separating the items in that way. They charge us for board and nursing. Now, when a bill comes in including charges for board we have to send it to the accounting officers of the Treasury for payment, thus entailing delay and red tape.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair has any information regarding this matter, it seems to be a change of law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill will admit that it is a change of law.

Mr. HULL. I do not propose to discuss any more points of order. You can rule it out if you think well.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless it can be shown that this is part of an existing law, which has not been stated, the point of order will be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

Engineer depots: For incidental expenses of the depots, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, pay of civilian clerks, mechanics, and laborers, extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than ten days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; repair of and for materials to repair public buildings, machinery, and unforeseen expenses, $11,500.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the Chair for information. I understood the Chair yesterday to rule that where a part of a paragraph was ruled out on a point of order the whole paragraph would go out.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order was made against the entire paragraph, yes; but if the point of order was directed against particular words in the paragraph, then only the words designated go out.

Mr. HULL. Then all the paragraph against which points of order have been made do not, if sustained, necessarily rule out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In this very case the gentleman from Illinois might have made the point of order against the entire paragraph, and it would have gone out.

Mr. HULL. If a gentleman made a point of order against an entire paragraph and another Member made another point of order to a part of the paragraph it would vitiate the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would first rule on the point of order made against the entire paragraph, and if it went out there would be no occasion to rule as to the other, unless it was proposed to replace the part stricken out by an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings, Engineer School, Washington, D. C.: For completion of two incomplete sets of noncommissioned officers' quarters, $15,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question relating to this building. This appropriation is intended to complete the construction. Was it commenced under the general appropriation for barracks and quarters, where the limitation is $20,000?

Mr. HULL. They were commenced under a specific appropriation for that building and supposed to complete them, but the entire amount was expended because they struck low ground where they were required to have concrete piles. They have piles driven down there 40 feet. If they had obtained an ordinary foundation they could have completed the buildings on the amount appropriated.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought this was possibly one of the cases where they commenced the work of the construction of the building under the authorization to expend $20,000, and then came to have a specific appropriation in excess of that.

Mr. HULL. There were estimates submitted that they could build these quarters out of the money for the two sets of double quarters for noncommissioned officers and their families, but in the construction they met with difficulties they had no reason to expect, and the entire amount was used below ground. This is simply to complete the superstructure that is provided for, and that ought to have been done out of the first appropriation. The testimony was that they had gone down 40 feet for a foundation before they could get a sufficiently good one to build upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of one new stable, $17,500.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill where this stable is located.

Mr. HULL. At the Washington Barracks.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it is to cost $17,500?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do the same conditions regarding the foundations apply to this as to the other?

Mr. HULL. I am unable to say, because they have not commenced yet. I will say to the gentleman that in every other case at the Washington Barracks they have had no trouble with the foundations. This is the first trouble that has been reported.

The engineers are largely a mounted corps. This stable is intended to take care of seventy horses.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was all I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

The balance under the appropriation for field artillery for organized militia for the fiscal years 1904 and 1905 will not be covered into the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year, but remain for disbursement to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. This, as I understand it, is virtually a permanent appropriation. I should like to know whether the gentleman in charge of the bill is aware of the fact that this is introducing an almost entirely new principle in the matter of appropriating for the Army or for any part of the Army? It is continuing indefinitely appropriations made for the years 1904 and 1905, and Congress can not appropriate for the Army or for any part of the Army and continue those appropriations under the Constitution for a longer time than two years.

Mr. MANN. We have just done it in a preceding paragraph.

Mr. HULL. This is a reappropriation of what is left. I want to say to the gentleman that the militia law requires the militia to be organized on substantially the same lines as the Army. They are trying to organize it in all branches of the service. They have started out to equip the militia with the same number of guns for batteries that would be used in the organization of the Regular Army. The Chief of Ordnance says that one more appropriation for this will complete the work, and that thereafter there will be no necessity for any further appropriations unless there should, by Congressional action or in some other way, be a large increase in the National Guard of the country. As now constituted, one more appropriation after this will complete this work entirely, which is for the militia. Of course we all understand that in the event of war these guns and all guns used by the militia belong to the Government and could be used for national defense; but this trains the militia in their use.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much of the appropriation of these two years is unexpended?

Mr. HULL. There is only a small amount expended. I read from the statement of General Crozier before the committee:

Now, I would like to propose here an item of general legislation with reference to this subject which has not been submitted to the committee before. I will explain the circumstances under which the desirability of it has arisen. The item I propose is as follows:

"The balance under the appropriation for field artillery for organized militia for the fiscal years 1904 and 1905 will not be covered into the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year, but remain for disbursement to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation."

There is an existing statute which requires that the balance of any fund, remaining two years after the expiration of the fiscal year for which the fund was appropriated, shall be covered into the Treasury, and that thereafter any funds to meet an obligation incurred under that, although the obligation might have been incurred in the proper time, would have to be made in a certification to Congress. When you gave me that money for field batteries I made contracts with people—some of whom had been in the business and some of whom came in as competitors against existing manufacturers and needed some encouragement. It is possible that the material contracted for will not all have been delivered, and therefore payment will not be due on them until after the 30th of June, 1907, although the appropriation was made for the year ending the 30th of June, 1905. The contracts were made in time, but the payments will not be due in time to cover this contingency.

That is the only reason it is put in. It is all contracted for.

Mr. TAWNEY. That law that the gentleman refers to is a law that was passed to correct an evil that had grown up in the Departments here and in Congress of continuing appropriations indefinitely, so that we never knew exactly how much money had been appropriated.

Mr. HULL. It is a very common thing to reappropriate——

Mr. TAWNEY. The law was passed for that reason, providing that the unexpended balances of appropriations should be turned back into the Treasury at the expiration of two years.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, I can see no reason for deviating from that policy in this case, because we can at this session of Congress or at the next session of Congress reappropriate this money, and I think that policy is far better than to commence repealing by piecemeal the existing law.

Mr. HULL. Is it not a matter of common practice, where contracts have been made in time, for the Appropriations Committee and other committees having charge of appropriations to report just this class of legislation? Has it not been done recently?

Mr. TAWNEY. The fortifications bill always does it, but that is the only bill that I know of where it is done. Take the river and harbor appropriations; they are all made to carry out contracts, but they are made from year to year.

Mr. HULL. Certainly; but Congress determines how much shall be given each year. In this appropriation Congress said so much could be expended for guns, and under that authority it was all contracted.

Mr. TAWNEY. As the amount can be expended, only so much being appropriated as can be expended under the contract in the next fiscal year.

Mr. PARKER. This is a reappropriation. These are contracts made in 1905, which expire prior to the use of the money of 1907, just after the present Congress. We are now appropriating the money for next year so that these contracts may be paid.

Mr. TAWNEY. You are continuing the appropriation?

Mr. PARKER. No; we reappropriate for that one year. General Crozier proceeds to say that the appropriation is available for only one year. He wants to get the money back.

Mr. MANN. Is not this the situation: That it requires a good while to construct some of these arms? This is a construction of guns. They make a contract which is often not carried out within the two years' time, and in some cases the work is done and not completed within the two years' time, although the money is allotted for that purpose. The money, as far as the Department is concerned, is disposed of on the books of the Treasury, and all that they want is to be able to carry out the contract and pay the proportional cost of the maintenance of the arsenal exactly as you do with fortifications.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand; but it is not a case where money has been allotted.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; the contracts are made.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the contracts are made.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language simply says "to cover obligations."

Mr. HULL. Well, an obligation is a contract, isn't it?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be a definite obligation and it may be an indefinite obligation.

Mr. HULL. General Crozier gives the positive statement here that he has made contracts with people, some of whom have been in the business and some of whom came in as competitors against existing manufacturers, who needed some encouragement. He says that it is possible that material contracted for will not all have been delivered, and therefore payment not be due.

Mr. TAWNEY. The general is in doubt himself as to whether it is necessary.

Mr. HULL. And if it comes in——

Mr. TAWNEY. It could come in under a new Congress.

Mr. HULL. No; they would have to wait from the 30th of June until the next year when Congress met. This is a reappropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not a reappropriation. I would not object if it was a reappropriation. It simply says this "will not be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. HULL. That is a reappropriation.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman that this was not drawn by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, but was drawn by a clerk in the Ordnance Department. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa why he does not state that it shall be available until the obligation is paid?

Mr. HULL. This is a reappropriation, although the language may not be all that you desire.

Mr. MANN. I presume that the gentleman construes it as a reappropriation.

Mr. HULL. There are other lawyers here that can construe language. The provision reads, "the balance under the appropriation for field artillery for organized militia for the fiscal years 1904 and 1905 shall not be covered"——

Mr. TAWNEY. It says "will not be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. HULL. I know it does; but it should read, "shall not be covered into the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year, but remain for disbursement to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation."

Mr. TAWNEY. Shall "continue available until expended."

Mr. HULL. They will have it all expended by the next year.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is in the Treasury.

Mr. HULL. You can add to it, "and continue available until expended."

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the usual language. I do not like to see a provision enacted into the statute here expressly violating, in terms, the law of Congress——

Mr. MANN. And the Constitution.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a statute, too, and the Constitution, too, as to the Army—which expressly provides that these appropriations shall not continue longer than for a period of two years.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has the impression that an appropriation is covered into the Treasury at the end of two years. I hold in my hand a list of some appropriations that are still in the Treasury to the credit of certain funds. One of them is a credit to the fund for the capture of Jefferson Davis, of $1,503.28. I suppose it has been more than two years since the appropriation was made and much more than two years since any bills were incurred under it. Another is an appropriation for quartermaster's stores and commissary's supplies under the act of Congress approved July 4, 1864.

Mr. TAWNEY. Which appropriation was made available until expended. That is the reason there is a balance there.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing stated that these appropriations are made available until expended.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not there, but in the law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has just stated that it is contrary to the Constitution. There are various claims of this sort. Here is one for suppressing hostilities of the Piute Indians in Nevada in 1860. I daresay those appropriations were not made available until they were expended. What I am endeavoring to do is to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to the fact, also, that if there is a 2-cent balance left in this appropriation it will be on the books of the Treasury until time ends.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not unless it is made available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Under this proposition it will be.

Mr. HULL. Let me submit this to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. If you put in the word "shall" in place of the word "will" and make it read, "shall not be covered into the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year, but remain for disbursement to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation," and stop there, the very minute the outstanding obligations are met, would not any balance then be covered into the Treasury?

Mr. MANN. Nobody ever knows when the outstanding obligations are met.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Who?

Mr. HULL. Why, the parties who contract them, the Ordnance Department must know.

Mr. MANN. The people who have the custody of the money do not know.

Mr. HULL. The only way that any remaining over after they are met would be by putting in the words "and continue available until expended."

Mr. MANN. Why don't you make it "shall remain available for the ensuing fiscal year?"

Mr. HULL. Very well; I will not object to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to correct one mistake that some Members seem to be laboring under. The money remaining to the credit of an appropriation goes back into the Treasury at the expiration of two years. But, under the same law, the balance is available until about the 1st of October next to meet any obligations that were contracted under the appropriation and not met prior to the expiration of the two years. That is the law and that is the practice under the law in all the Departments, so that, in effect, so far as obligations contracted under authority of appropriations is concerned, the appropriation is available for two years and three months—I think it is to the 1st of October.

Mr. MANN. Three years and three months, is it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. Two years and three months.

Mr. MANN. It is two years after the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Make it available for the next ensuing year, and it will be satisfactory.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well; I withdraw the point of order and offer that amendment, to make it read "shall remain available during the next ensuing year."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "shall remain available during the next fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think they have yet the amendment that I suggest, on line 25, page 43, to strike out the word "will" and insert the word "shall," so that it will read "shall not be covered into the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, line 25, strike out "will" and insert "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Clerk report the paragraph now, or that part of it which is amended, as amended, after striking out the word "will" in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the paragraph as it now reads.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

The balance under the appropriations for field artillery for organized militia for the fiscal years of 1904 and 1905 shall not be covered into the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year, but remain for disbursement to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation, and shall remain available during the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Do you want that to be in that way?

Mr. TAWNEY. My purpose was——

Mr. HULL. Why not put it for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and then you have it definitely?

Mr. TAWNEY. My amendment was to strike out all after the word "will," in line 25, or the word "shall."

Mr. MANN. After the word "but," on the next page, do you not mean?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. "Shall remain available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment changing "will" to "shall" has been adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Strike out all the paragraph after the word "shall" and insert "shall remain available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Minnesota give the Chair his attention? Without objection, the Clerk will again report the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph so as to read——

Mr. HULL. I ask that this amendment be rereported; I think there is some misunderstanding about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph so as to read: "The balance under the appropriations for field artillery for organized militia for the fiscal years 1904 and 1905 shall remain available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908."

Mr. HULL. I think there should be added to that "to meet outstanding obligations incurred under that appropriation."

Mr. MANN. Under those appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Under those appropriations. There are two appropriations there, and I am afraid you destroy the appropriation if you do not put that in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the words, "to meet outstanding obligations incurred under said appropriations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $30,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words in this paragraph, "and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals." I make the point of order that it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs and was so ruled at the last session of this House.

Mr. HULL. What provision is that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I simply move to strike out the words, "and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals."

Mr. HULL. I think those words ought to be stricken out; they are subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Converting muzzle-loading guns for saluting purposes: For converting muzzle-loading field guns to breech-loading guns for saluting purposes, and for necessary mounts for the same, $5,250.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this item is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. HULL. We have been carrying on that work of converting the old muzzle-loading guns in this bill, but I have no objection to its going out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Illinois a little information in regard to the pay of an Army captain, including all allowances. The only difference in the pay, as I gave it yesterday, is between a captain mounted and an infantry captain. The captain mounted is allowed $200 a year additional pay and the expenses of a horse. If he keeps a horse it is fed, but if he does not keep a horse, if he is doing staff duty, where he does not require a horse, he gets no additional pay for it; so this covers all allowances that it is possible for an officer to get the benefit of under the present law, and I now ask that it be read so that the gentleman from Illinois may have full information.

Mr. MANN. Will it also state in reference to medical supplies?

Mr. HULL. Everything of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Fuel, grocery supplies, rent, and a number of other things I have not yet learned about, which are constantly growing.

Mr. HULL. It covers everything he can get, even things the gentleman has not thought of.

The statement is as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

The only "allowances" received by me (a line captain) are my pay, $200 a month; commutation of quarters, $36 a month; the privilege of buying fuel at the rate of $3 per cord of oak wood or its heat equivalent; the privilege of buying commissaries at Government rate, and medical attention and supplies.

I use 8,000 pounds of coal a month for five months of the year, and 4,000 pounds a month for the rest of the year. The market price is $3.18 a thousand pounds, and the Government rate is $1.41 a thousand pounds. In each case the coal is delivered in the cellar. The saving to me amounts to $14.66 a month for five months and $7.33 for the rest of the year. Total saving allowance for the year, $124.63.

My bill for commissaries runs about $18 a month, and the saving to me is about 10 per cent of this. Total saving for the year, $17.60. Many officers do not patronize the commissary when near cities, as the city prices are frequently cheaper. While on duty at West Point three years ago, I bought all my commissary supplies at Park & Tilford's in New York, as I found that I could get them there, pay freight, and then get better value than I could at the West Point commissary.

With reference to medical attention and medical supplies, within the last year I personally paid a bill of $85 to a hospital in this city for medical attention to a member of my family. Besides this, I have had the services of an Army surgeon for which a civilian doctor would have charged about $75. There are two Army surgeons in Washington, and there are 288 officers who, with their families, are authorized to have medical attention. The pay and commutation of quarters of these two surgeons combined is $575.47 a month, or about $2 for each officer entitled to services. Medical supplies may run this up to $1 a month more, making its value $3 a month.

The value to me of one year's allowances is summarized as follows:

Fuel savings	$124.63
Commissary savings	17.60
Medical attention	36.00
Total	178.23

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the motion to strike out the last word is still prevailing, I wish to say that I knew they would not give all the information. He omits, to begin with, his rent.

Mr. HULL. He puts in his rent; he gets $36 a month.

Mr. MANN. If it is in there, I did not hear it. He winds up by telling what his medical supplies are worth.

Mr. HULL. He makes an estimate of that.

Mr. MANN. His fuel is worth so much, and his groceries are worth so much, and if the statement of the officer be true and not exaggerated, that itself is rather a strong indictment against the War Department. As I understand it, it is the practice of the War Department to furnish grocery supplies at 10 per cent over the cost where they are bought in the market—in New York City in this case. This officer said that he could buy supplies in New York City, pay the freight, ship them to West Point, and get them cheaper than he could out of the Commissary Department. If it be true that a man can buy at retail and ship by freight from New York to West Point for 10 per cent less than the Government buys at wholesale in New York, it is a curious commentary upon the purchases made by the Government.

Now, the gentleman says there are only two surgeons in Washington—that is, two Army surgeons. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill think that statement is accurate?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Illinois will read what the officer stated, he will find that he did not say that. There are two here that are assigned to treat officers on duty here. There are other surgeons here that have other duties.

Mr. MANN. Those are the regular surgeons. How many contract surgeons are there?

Mr. HULL. There are none at all in Washington.

Mr. MANN. How long has it been since they disposed of the contract surgeons in Washington?

Mr. HULL. When did they have any here?

Mr. MANN. They have had them here. I have known of a contract surgeon in Washington.

Mr. HULL. When have they had them here?

Mr. MANN. Not very long ago.

Mr. HULL. They had a man here at the head of the Commission to examine dental surgeons.

Mr. MANN. I am not referring to dental surgeons, but contract surgeons, whose only duty was to give medical attention to Army officers.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman knows of any contract surgeon in Washington who is here for the purpose of treating Army officers he has more information than I have.

Mr. MANN. I will be glad to impart to the gentleman some private information on the subject.

Mr. HULL. I want to say one word more, Mr. Chairman, not on this question, but on a proposition submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs to authorize the exchange of the old rifles used by the National Guard for the new Army service gun, when a sufficient quantity have been manufactured by the Government to permit of such an exchange, on the same terms under which we have heretofore exchanged arms in the service. I hope, before the bill becomes a law, that this provision will be incorporated in the measure, because I believe the militia should have the best gun that is made, so that in time of war it will be more efficient thereby. It was only by oversight that is omitted from this bill as reported to the House.

I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 23551, the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, a vote will be taken on the amendments en gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 23821, the fortification appropriation bill; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be limited to four hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 23821, a bill making appropriations for fortifications. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations has reported to the House a bill carrying in round numbers $5,400,000 for fortifications and other works of defense. The construction of fortifications and coast defenses of the United States has been carried on for twenty years in general upon the plans of what is known as the Endicott Board, created by act of Congress in 1885, and which made its report in 1886. The years that have elapsed since that have wrought many changes in the needs of the country for fortifications. In the meantime the system practiced of protecting these guns with armored emplacements and turrets has ceased to be either desirable or practicable; and the elimination of this from the plans of the Endicott Board has resulted in a reduction of the cost of the completion of the fortifications under the system proposed by that board. At that time the modern disappearing gun carriage was unknown; and of course in the absence of the disappearing gun carriage it was necessary to protect the guns by armor at the emplacement and by turrets.

The Endicott Board did not include in its estimates, which aggregated $126,000,000, anything for sites. They did not include in their report anything for reserve ammunition. They did not include in their report anything for barracks at the seacoast batteries. It thus appears that the $126,000,000 estimated to be necessary by the Endicott Board did not approximately cover the amount necessary for the proper fortification of the coast even of continental United States.

In the meantime the judgment of the War Department has changed as to the necessity for fortifications at some of the points provided to be fortified by the Endicott plan. The elimination of some features not justified by a modern system, and the elimination of some places, have reduced the cost, so that it is now estimated that for $99,000,000 all can be done that was contemplated by the Endicott Board, and which would still be desirable to do.

Mr. MCCALL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, does that mean $99,000,000 in all?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It means $99,000,000 in all. Of that sum about $64,000,000, in round numbers, has been appropriated. A large amount in excess of this has been carried in the fortification bills, covering items to which I have referred, which were not included in the Endicott estimate for sites, ammunition, and other things. The result is that we have appropriated all through these years an average of about 3 per cent of the amount estimated by the Endicott Board.

But a year ago, under an order of the Executive, a new board was created to revise the plans of the Endicott Board, now generally known as the "Taft Board." That board's work has never been expressly sanctioned by Congress, but it may be an aid to us in determining how much of the plans of the Endicott Board are now regarded as obsolete by the military authorities upon this subject.

One of the matters of a disturbing character in the evolution of this system of seacoast defense is found in this: A few years ago the 12-inch gun was regarded as the ideal heavy gun for seacoast defense, and the 12-inch gun has been already mounted at all our important harbors. It is now discovered that the 12-inch gun, when fired with the velocity contemplated, namely, 2,500 to 2,600 feet per second at the muzzle, will wear out the gun so that it becomes practically useless in from 60 to 70 shots unless relined.

The Taft Board reports that these guns can now be fired twice a minute, leaving the life of one of these guns, when fired at the maximum theoretical capacity, less than one hour, and but little in excess of half an hour. In view of this fact, the War Department has devised a 14-inch gun which it is believed will be free in large measure from this rapid deterioration. The rapid deterioration of the 12-inch gun is due to the enormous muzzle velocity of the projectile, which destroys the rifling in the gun, as I have stated, in from 60 to 70 shots. Where that velocity is reduced to 2,200 feet per second at the muzzle, the life of the gun is increased to between 300 and 400 shots, but the range of the gun is reduced about 25 per cent. Under the well-known principle that the momentum of the projectile at the point of contact is the product of its velocity and its weight, it is believed that the 14-inch gun, with a less velocity than the present 12-inch gun, and consequently a greatly reduced wear upon the rifling, will at the point of contact have equal power with the present 12-inch gun.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has that proposition been demonstrated by experiment, or is it theoretical?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The principle, of course, is a well-settled one that the force at the point of contact is the product of the velocity and the weight, and that by increasing the weight you will get the same blow with a decreased velocity. Now, they have not manufactured the 14-inch gun. This bill carries $132,000 to make one 14-inch gun. Perhaps it will be partly an experiment, but certainly it will be a success as a gun, even though it may not accomplish all that may be hoped for in obviating the defect in the 12-inch gun.

I stated that this bill carries in round numbers $5,400,000. It happens that only twice in thirteen years has so small an amount been carried by the fortifications bill—last year and one previous year. This is almost exactly the average appropriation for the last eighteen years. And when I say this it must be borne in mind that during the earlier years of that period all the appropriations were for continental United States, whereas this bill carries $1,600,000 in round numbers for the defense of the insular possessions. So that if we were to deduct the appropriations for the insular possessions we would find this bill the smallest by far in the past thirteen years, and I think the smallest in eighteen years. I speak of this to show that the committee, while defending the United States properly, have sought to be economical in the expenditure of money, believing that the advanced state of our fortifications justifies this policy of slower progress than in time past.

In presenting this bill I may as well avow that we have found ourselves between two conflicting elements—the one thinking that we were progressing too rapidly in the defense of our insular possessions, the other contending that we were proceeding too slowly. So far as those are concerned who think we are proceeding too slowly in the insular possessions, I shall content myself at this time with saying that while we have only averaged an annual appropriation of 3 per cent toward the completion of the fortification of continental United States, this bill carries 7 per cent of the entire estimates for the insular possessions. So that we are proceeding twice as fast under this bill in the insular possessions as we have proceeded in continental United States. For the present I shall deem that a sufficient answer to those who contend that we ought to proceed more rapidly than we are doing in the insular possessions.

Upon the other hand, I have this to say to those who claim that we should not proceed so rapidly in the insular possessions: It must be borne in mind that in continental United States the seacoast fortifications are but an outer line of defense. Behind these fortifications are 80,000,000 people prepared to resist, to the uttermost, invasion by any foreign foe. In the Philippines and in the Hawaiian Islands we have no such force of patriotic Americans to constitute a second line of defense; and if Manila or Honolulu be taken, we have no mighty force in the rear to drive the intrduders out of the land as we have here in continental United States. So it has seemed to most of us that we might well adopt the middle ground and say that we would proceed more rapidly in the insular possessions, relatively, than we have ever proceeded in continental United States; but, upon the other hand, that, proceeding more than twice as fast in those possessions as in continental United States, is proceeding with very considerable rapidity, and all that we are justified in doing under the circumstances. Now, Mr. Chairman, I presume from time to time I shall find it necessary to reply to those who may differ with the majority of the committee upon the wisdom or course pursued in drafting this bill, but I do not care to take further time of the committee in its original presentation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to ask a few questions purely for information. Has Congress adopted any plan for the fortifications of the Pacific islands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Congress can not be said to have adopted any plan.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did the Taft board recommend any system of coast defense for those islands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It did.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How many harbors and seaports are included in the policy or plan of the Taft board for coast defenses in the Pacific islands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Taft board reports in favor of fortifying Manila, Subig Bay, Honolulu, Pearl Harbor, and Guam. The total estimates of the Taft board for our insular possessions are, in round numbers, $22,000,000, but your committee have only allowed or recommended appropriations covering certain defenses in the Philippines and Hawaii. That is, the language of the bill is "For seacoast batteries in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman believe that the fortification of the harbors included in the report of the Taft board would constitute an adequate coast defense for the Philippine Archipelago, for instance?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I should assume that these defenses proposed at Subig Bay and at Manila by the Taft board would not be available for defenses of the other ports of the archipelago, but the expense of seacoast fortifications is exceeding great. The defenses at Manila would cost more than $6,000,000, and at Subig Bay more than $2,000,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman this: Unless we make adequate defenses in the Philippine Archipelago, we are in comparatively little better condition than if we made none. If we leave some exposed point for the landing of the enemy, we have lost practically the whole situation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not. I may say, in the first place, that it is never practicable to attempt to fortify the whole coast at home, but only the important harbors. Now, the attempt to fortify all the islands, sparsely populated and of little value, of the Philippines, would cost a fabulous sum. The only purpose in the Philippines is to fortify the populous places and the available harbors and important naval bases.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I wanted the gentleman's opinion on that question. I feel a good deal concerned over the situation in the Philippine Islands. They constitute our element of weakness in an international strife, in a conflict with a foreign power. There is no doubt about that. I wondered what the plan of the Government was toward defending these islands, because we have got to defend them as long as we control them. Now, the Taft board recommended fortifications and a number of additional harbors in the United States, did it not?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. A very few additional harbors, if any. It did recommend some additional outer line of defense. For example, and there will be large discussion on that subject, which I do not care to go into now in detail, it will appear that the cities on Chesapeake Bay are fully and abundantly and impregnably fortified, but it does appear that at the time the Endicott board prepared the plans of seacoast fortification the range of guns and what they deemed a reasonable expense did not allow them to recommend the fortifications at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay, but to fortify the cities and harbors of Chesapeake Bay. The Taft board has recommended the construction of an artificial island in the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, a project that was rejected by the Endicott board as being too expensive. That is an outer line of defense and is designed to prevent a foreign fleet from entering Chesapeake Bay and there making a naval base.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill before the committee now carries no appropriation for that sort of an improvement?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I read some discussions, I think, in one of the magazines recently on that very question. I did not know whether it was feasible or not, because I know so little about coast-defense work generally. Are there any fortified harbors in Porto Rico?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I understand that some Spanish fortifications exist there, but no money has been appropriated for Porto Rico, so far as I am advised, by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did the Taft Board recommend fortifying any of the ports of Porto Rico?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They did, but the War Department has never regarded that as pressing as other insular possessions and has never made estimates therefor to us asking for money for that purpose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is probably true, but in view of the fact that the amount carried by the bill has been reduced it occurred to me that it might be a good plan to start, if it be the ultimate policy of the Government to fortify Porto Rican ports, and I think it must be ultimately——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They are better fortified, as I understand it, than any other of the ports that we took from Spain.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no doubt about that, and then their proximity to the United States gives them an additional safeguard; but it occurred to me that we ought to engage our thought and energy largely now toward fortifying these islands, because they are pretty generally exposed and they are a source of weakness and probably of concern.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have always contended that we should largely defer to the judgment of the skilled men upon this subject, and they have insisted that the Pacific Islands were more important than Porto Rico.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. More important because more exposed?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. More exposed in the sense that they are more distant and harder for us to defend.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that is true enough.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the chairman of the committee to tell me whether I understood him correctly. I understood him to say that the appropriation proposed by the bill carries about 70 per cent of the estimates for insular possessions.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will explain that so that there will be no misunderstanding. The Taft Board's estimate for the protection of the Philippine and Hawaiian islands is slightly in excess of $11,000,000. The estimate of the Taft Board for the fortification of all the insular possessions is slightly in excess of $22,000,000. The amount we give this year for the insular possessions, which will be expended all in Hawaii and the Philippines, is 7 per cent of the entire amount estimated for all the insular possessions, or 14 per cent of the amount estimated for the islands where these appropriations are to be expended. In other words, in about seven years with such expenditures as this, everything that the Department has ever estimated for would be completed in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands; but it must not be forgotten that we have already appropriated large sums toward this $11,000,000. I am simply giving you the amount of progress this year at 14 per cent of the total estimate. As a matter of fact we have already appropriated about five millions when this bill is passed, or about half the amount, so that it would be only necessary to carry this for three or four more years to absolutely complete the appropriations asked by the Taft Board for the Hawaiian and Philippine islands.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. In making these appropriations of millions of dollars for the Philippine Islands, when are you going to get it back?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I never have understood that we have ever got back in any sense such as the gentleman apparently uses the term any money from anywhere. This money is expended for the protection of our pride.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; and you better get rid of them in some way.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will now ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] occupy some of his time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] in presenting the bill has given a comprehensive view of what has been done for the coast defenses of the country during the past eighteen or nineteen years, or since the initiation of the Endicott Board's scheme of coast defenses. I think it is a matter of some congratulation that the committee without any serious difference of opinion has found it possible to present a bill which is one of the smallest during the past seventeen years. The amount actually appropriated for the coast defenses of the United States proper is $3,643,943. It is not the belief of the committee that the defenses of the country are in a perfect condition, but it is always universally conceded that the defenses are in such condition that should an imperative call be made upon the military officials of the country adequate protection would be found afforded to the important and strategic points along the coasts of the United States.

What I wish particularly to criticise in this bill is the fact that so large a percentage of the moneys appropriated for the defenses of the country are made available for insular possessions.

Last year the estimates for the coast defenses amounted to the sum of $8,953,112. The appropriation was $5,053,993, and of that amount $947,000, or about 19 per cent of the gross appropriation, was set apart for use in the insular possessions. The pending bill carries $5,411,883. The estimates submitted by the Department for the coming year were $15,068,559, while of the five and a half millions, in round numbers, appropriated by the bill, $1,592,940, or about 30 per cent of the entire appropriation, is set apart for our insular possessions. It must be remembered, too, that in appropriating for the defenses of the United States, Congress is appropriating to carry out a well-defined plan which was prepared under the authority of a board created by act of Congress. In appropriating to provide for the defenses of our insular possessions money is appropriated not to carry out a well-defined scheme which was initiated with Congressional authority, but to carry out a plan which has been adopted by the executive department of the Government without so far having the approval or sanction of the legislative branch of the Government.

It will be remembered, too, that in the last session of Congress there was a serious conflict of opinion and sharp discussion as to the advisability of fortifying Subig Bay, in the Philippine Islands. In the plan under which, apparently, appropriations for fortifications in the insular possessions are being made the Taft board has indicated Subig Bay to be one of the most important places to be defended, and recommends a large sum to complete defenses there. My criticisms of the amount allotted for the insular possessions would be these: If these defenses be imperative, much larger appropriations should be made at once in order that the proposed fortifications may be available in any sudden emergency. If they be not imperative, if the policy of this Government regarding the Philippine Islands is yet to be defined, if ultimately—when I say ultimately I mean within a reasonable time—the United States are to relinquish control of the Philippine Islands, I doubt the propriety of now expending a very large sum in permanent fortifications at any places there. The so-called Taft board submitted a plan which calls for the expenditure of $22,000,000 for the fortification of our island possessions, and the committee has allowed upon this plan money at a much more liberal rate than has been allowed for the coast defenses of the United States. In 1888, when the Endicott board's plan was adopted, as the Taft board points out, the absence of any navy that might properly be designated by that name made it imperative that there should at once be established harbors of refuge for our merchant marine, and in spite of that fact, in the year 1890 the appropriations under the fortifications act were only $1,233,594. At this time, with what many people believed to be an ample naval force for any legitimate purpose, with the well-defined policy of the Government for some years past to keep some considerable naval force in Asiatic waters, it is nevertheless felt necessary in this bill, in order to protect the limited interest of this country in the Philippines as compared with our great interest here, to proceed at a much more rapid rate in making the appropriations for their defenses. Such haste, in my opinion, is unnecessary.

This bill contains the language regarding the defenses for the insular possessions in the same form as the last fortification act. Several years ago Congress required the War Department to submit estimates in detail for each place in our insular possessions where it was proposed to expend money for fortifications. In making the appropriations, however, the method of submitting the estimates has not been followed, but the appropriations have been given generally with discretion to the Department to use the money where it believes it to be most necessary. I believe it to be more important to attempt this year to change the language of the bill in this respect, particularly since the Taft board points out the places that should be fortified in the order of their importance, and the Secretary of War states that expenditures would be made for defenses at those places in the order specified, were it not for the fact that the Secretary also stated that if there were any difference of opinion as to the advisability of going on with the fortification of Subig Bay, and if sufficient money were not given to fortify both places in the Philippine Islands selected by the board, that he would use the appropriation made in this bill to complete the defenses at Manila. So, merely to give expression to the difference of opinion that exists and in the hope that some day the policy of the Department may so change that the Subig Bay project will be abandoned, I call attention to the fact that the appropriation for the insular possessions will not complete the defenses contemplated at both places, but may be used with great advantage at the place the Secretary deems most important—Manila.

The Taft board, in its report, points out that it is a "naval maxim that the enemy's fleet is the primary objective, and it follows that the harbor defenses can not depend upon the presence of any vessels to resist a naval attack. While it is possible such vessels may be in the port, their presence will not be part of a plan for harbor defense by naval cooperation. It follows, therefore, that the defense of such harbor must depend immediately upon guns and not marine mines, and that this defense must be sufficiently strong to repel any naval attack that may reasonably be expected."

And yet, in the report of the Taft board, one of the reasons given for the fortification of Subig Bay is to make available for the defense of Manila the fleet that is supposed to operate from Subig Bay as a base.

My only purpose in saying anything upon this bill, Mr. Chairman, was to give expression to my dissatisfaction at the extent of the appropriations for the insular possessions in comparison with those for the United States proper. I believe that the committee has acted conservatively, and has given in the main all that is imperatively required for the coast defenses at this time. And following the action of my colleague upon the committee, I shall reserve for other places, when special items are reached in the bill, any further suggestions I may have to make regarding such items.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is not ready to consume some of his time, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] thirty minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss what is commonly known now in the newspapers and amongst the Members of Congress as the "docking bill." I do not know if the American people could see this Chamber at this moment that it would be necessary for me to discuss, certainly for the people of the country, the need of a docking bill, to force the Members of the House who are chronic absentees to attend the daily sessions.

Here is a bill now under consideration, Mr. Chairman, that carries nearly $5,000,000, I think, and with practically an empty Chamber to listen to the discussion of these two matters. I dare say, Mr. Chairman, that there were not any more Members present when we passed the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill some weeks ago. That was an immense bill. I do not know how many millions of dollars it carried.

But I do know that as soon as the Members voted on the salary question that a great many of them pitched out for home or somewhere—I do not know where they went. We all know that.

Mr. Chairman, I have started this move, and I have done it reluctantly. I have no ill-feeling toward any Member of this House nor of the Senate. My relations, I am gratified to say, are pleasant and have been pleasant during my Congressional career.

But, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I owe a duty to this House; I owe it to my constituents, I owe it to the country, to bring this chronic absenteeism to the attention of not only the Members of this House, but the people of the United States. I am under oath to uphold the law. So are you, gentlemen. And why? Because, Mr. Chairman, of the very thing that occurs here day after day, which I have described, namely, a chronic absenteeism of the Members of this House when great questions of state are being or should be discussed, and when millions and millions of the people's money are being spent as though money grew on trees.

And who does the daily work day in and day out? It is the handful of faithful men who come here day in and day out. Why, Mr. Chairman, I was delighted a few minutes ago to join in the applause that greeted the announcement of the Speaker when he turned over the committee to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who from 12 o'clock every day until this House adjourns is in his seat and upon his feet, looking after the business of this House and of the country. Like an intellectual corkscrew our minority leader [Mr. WILLIAMS] stands on watch on this side, and few more. There are a few faithful on each side. They bear the daily burden that we all should help bear and see that the work is well done.

I have seen both of our leaders ask "Where are our men on this committee," and no one present to answer and explain the merits or demerits of the bill.

Then both leaders pry into the bill to see what it is—at great disadvantage, of course. This they must almost daily do. It should not be so. Members should be here from all the committees and look after bills coming from their respective committees.

So much for this.

In a number of Congresses away back yonder the absent Members, except their excuse was illness, were docked. I ask the Clerk to read the form used by the Sergeant-at-Arms in the Fifty-third Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPORTANT.

OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., ———, 189—.

DEAR SIR: I mail you herewith a blank which contains a copy of section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, passed August 16, 1856, together with a certificate to be signed by you showing the number of days, if any, you have been absent from the House during the month of ———, 189—.

The certificate of the Speaker, which follows it, will be filled out according to the facts certified by you.

This certificate can not be filled out by you until the 3d of each month. As the 4th is pay day, the Speaker can not sign or the Sergeant-at-Arms pay this certificate in time to meet the checks that many Members have been in the habit of making payable on the 4th of each month.

Section 40, referred to above, will be enforced on May 4, 1894, covering the month of April, as I am advised that I am left no discretion in the matter.

To prevent serious inconvenience to Members and to prevent protest, checks which may have been in the habit of making payable on that day should not be drawn against their accounts until they have actual knowledge that their salaries have been placed to their credit if they desire to draw against the current month.

Respectfully,
H. W. SNOW,
Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives, United States.

To the Hon. ——— ———.

[Section 40, Revised Statutes.]

The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., ——— ———, 189—.

I hereby certify that during the month of ——— I have been absent ——— days, for which deductions should be made under section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, that form was prepared by Speaker Crisp himself, and he so stated on the floor of this House, as the RECORD shows. I will read the form again:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., ——— ———, 189—.

I hereby certify that during the month of ——— I have been absent ——— days, for which deductions should be made under section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

Now, then, here is the present form used:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., ———, ———.

I certify that there is due to the Hon. ——— ——— four hundred and ——— dollars, as a Member of the House of Representatives for the Fifty-ninth Congress.

——— ———, Speaker.

Received payment, ——— ———.
$41—.

Now, I did not know one word about the act of 1856 being the existing law until I had introduced the bill on the subject. In looking up the laws fixing the salaries of Members of Congress—the old acts—I came across these docking statutes, and seeing this chronic absenteeism growing and the evil results resulting I sat down at my desk here and wrote this bill and introduced it. I found as early as 1816 a docking statute was enacted. Members were then put on a salary.

Previous to 1816 the Members of Congress were allowed so much per day for each day's attendance in many if not all the laws, so that you see I have come by this matter very naturally and very honestly.

The rules of the House provide that—

Every Member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sitting, unless excused or necessarily prevented, and shall vote on each question put, unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question. Pairs shall be announced by the Clerk after the completion of the second roll call from a written list furnished him and signed by the Member making the statement to the Clerk, which list shall be published in the RECORD as part of the proceedings immediately following the names of those voting: Provided, That pairs shall be announced but once during the same legislative day.

I was looking at the statute of 1856 when I wrote out the bill that I prepared. My bill is substantially that act with this material difference, that the law of 1856 does not require the Member of Congress to certify "in writing" that he has been absent by reason of sickness. The bill that I introduced does require the excuse to be "in writing." That written certificate would be on file in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and open to the public to read. This is a day of publicity. This would strengthen the law.

So you see, gentlemen, that the situation historically, so far as I am concerned, is just as I have stated it.

As stated, the act of 1816 fixed the salary for the first time at so much per year. Previous to that it was a per diem, but the act of 1816 contained this proviso:

Provided, nevertheless, That in case any Senator, Representative, or Delegate shall not attend in his place at the day on which Congress shall convene, or shall absent himself before the close of the session, a deduction shall be made from the sum which would otherwise be allowed to him, in proportion to the time of his absence, save and in case of sickness, under the same provisions as are established by existing law; and the aforesaid allowance shall be certified and paid in the same manner as the daily compensation of Members of Congress has heretofore been.

The act of 1816 was repealed by the act of January 22, 1818, which put the Members back on a daily allowance in this language:

That at every session of Congress and every meeting of the Senate in the recess of Congress after the 3rd day of March, in the year 1817, each Senator shall be entitled to receive $8 for every day he has attended or shall attend the Senate, and shall also be allowed $8 for every 20 miles of estimated distance.

And so forth. A similar provision in the next session applied to Members of the House in the next section. Now, that was the law down to 1856. By the act of 1856 the law was made what it is to-day. I think I have the act here.

By the act of 1856 it is provided:

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, respectively, to deduct from the monthly payments to the Member as herein provided for the amount of his compensation for each day that such Member shall be absent from the House or Senate, respectively, unless such Representative, Senator, or Delegate shall assign a reason for such absence, the sickness of himself or some member of his family.

Now, that is the act of August 16, 1856, which was carried into the Revised Statutes of 1878 as section 40, which was referred to by Mr. Snow, the Sergeant-at-Arms in the Fifty-third Congress. Here is what Mr. Snow inserted in that notice:

Section 40, referred to above, will be enforced on May 4, 1894, covering the month of April, as I am advised, and I am left no discretion in the matter.

The law did not say that this, that, or the other man should enforce it. It says the Sergeant-at-Arms shall do so. Now, the Sergeant-at-Arms is an officer of this House. He is under oath and bond to obey the law. Rule IV of the House, which defines the duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms, reads as follows:

1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House and the Committee of the Whole during their sittings to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker or Chairman, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House, and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker; keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

SEC. 2. The symbol of his office shall be a mace, which shall be borne by him when enforcing order on the floor.

Let us go a little further, Mr. Chairman, and see how this law was enforced. You will find that in 1862 or in 1863, I forget which it was, Congress passed an act or resolution excusing the soldiers in the civil war who were Members of Congress. That was brought about by some Members coming up here who had been away fighting for their country, and the Sergeant-at-Arms refused to pay them their salary because they had been absent and could not excuse themselves because of having been sick. It reads as follows:

That until the further order of Congress the Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House are directed to receive as a valid excuse for absence from duty in Congress active employment in military service for the suppression of the rebellion without pay.

Without pay. Soldiers were not allowed pay while in the military service; surely Members should not expect pay in time of peace when wrongfully absent.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, that was passed the Hon. Charles Sumner offered a provision, which is now section 41 of the Revised Statutes, which permits the House and the Senate to excuse members under certain limitations.

SEC. 41. When any Member or Delegate withdraws from his seat and does not return before the adjournment of Congress, he shall, in addition to the sum deducted for each day, forfeit a sum equal to the amount which would have been allowed by law for his traveling expenses in returning home; and such sum shall be deducted from his compensation, unless the withdrawal is with the leave of the Senate or House of Representatives, respectively.

Now, gentlemen, what has been the effect of this law? When was any docking done? I do not intend to call names, I have not undertaken to find out who were docked in recent years, and I do not know who were docked and do not care who were docked. In fact, if I had the names I would not print them. But I find on page 3 of a House report, when it was being enforced in the Fifty-third Congress, this statement by Mr. Wolverton, from Pennsylvania, who reported this act of 1856—section 40, Revised Statutes, was the law. The report says:

Section 6 of the act of 1856 (now section 40 of the Revised Statutes) was understood by Members of Congress to be in force long after the passage of the act of 1866, and large amounts were deducted under it on account of the absence of Members and covered into the Treasury between 1856 and 1867, inclusive. In several cases large sums were deducted.

The committee can see how far back this law has been enforced. The report goes on to say:

In several cases large sums were deducted. Among others, Hon. Francis P. Blair in one year deducted $774.55; Hon. George W. Bridges, $1,685.10; Hon. Jacob P. Blair, $205.50; Hon. Benjamin Wood, $73.98; Hon. C. C. Culver, one hundred and seventy-three days, $2,402.78. These are only a few of the instances among many.

These names have already been printed.

Now, then, in 1869 the question came up, and the Sergeant-at-Arms submitted a letter as to whether or not to dock certain Members who had not been sworn in as Members of the House, and the House again recognized the existence of this law. It has been recognized by recent Congresses, the Fifty-third Congress enforcing this law when Mr. Snow, Sergeant-at-Arms under Speaker Crisp deducted salaries to the amount of $12,000—$12,000—I presume in one session, because of absenteeism! And under the regulation that I have read to you a few moments ago the question came up in the Fifty-fourth Congress as to whether or not they would reimburse these Members who had absented themselves from the House in the Fifty-third Congress. The question was raised upon the floor of this House and defeated, and the law again vindicated and upheld by a vote of 113 yeas to 55 nays on the motion carried to strike out the appropriation. Here are the words of the item in the appropriation:

To enable the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to pay Members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress the amounts withheld in their salaries on account of absence, $12,000.

This was stricken out, as stated.

At page 192 of Hinds's Parliamentary Practice you will find that these rules and practices, etc., are referred to as having been upheld. I turn now to the Manual that Mr. Hinds gets up for us, entitled "Constitution, Manual and Digest," and on page 553 of that book we find the following:

Provisions of Constitution relating to compensation of Members. (7) Constitution, Article I, section 6, p. 6.
Rate of pay of Member and how disbursed. (11) Revised Statutes, sections 38, 39, 46, 47, 48; 18 Stat. L., p. 4, 389; 14 Stat. L., p. 323; 19 Stat. L., p. 145; 26 Stat. L., p. 645; 22 Stat. L., p. 108.
The pay and mileage of Members are disbursed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. (1715, 1717) Rule IV, section 1; 26 Stat. L., pp. 645, 646.
Certificates of salary and mileage of Members may be signed for the Speaker by a designated employee. 33 Stat. L., p. —.
The statutes provide for deducting the pay of Members in certain leaves of absence. Revised Statutes, section 40.
The above law has been enforced. 2–53, Record, pp. 3797, 4130–4133. Reports Nos. 704, 1218; 2–54, Record, pp. 2013, 2049–2057.
Less than a quorum may not direct the enforcement of section 40, Revised Statutes, in order to secure the attendance of absent Members. (301 and footnote) 1–51, Journal, p. 1025, Record, p. 9922.

I believe Mr. Speaker Carlisle ruled that that was the law; that is, that less than a quorum could not pass this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss this question of law. I was simply going to discuss the usefulness of this law and these rules, the great need of both and their enforcement.

I have here a report made in the Fifty-third Congress upon a measure to repeal this law. Mr. Powers reported it from the Judiciary Committee. But the law was not repealed. It is now still the law as much as then.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York give me a little more time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman from Tennessee claim that a Member of Congress, in order to receive the salary of $5,000 a year, is compelled to remain in this Hall all the time?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In his seat?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all. He may be working in the committee room by an order of the House, by permission of the House. We grant these orders every day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What does the gentleman say to the provision of the Constitution that inveighs against cruel and unusual punishment? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman asks me about whether or not I say a Member of Congress must be here in this Chamber to earn his salary. I said no; he may have to be in the committee room, as I was yesterday, by permission of the House, but I was at work with my committee. He may have to be in the River and Harbor Committee room, where about eighteen of the best Members of Congress are, and whose attention and advice and assistance we must necessarily lose upon the floor of this House here every day until they get their report in. Hence the greater reason for the Members of Congress to be here every day, so that when these committees sit, as they must sit from time to time and day to day, but not every day on special matters, as in my case—the greater reason, I say, for a constant and daily and perpetual attendance upon the part of the Members of this House, except in case of illness.

Now, who made these rules? The gentleman from Ohio helped to do it and perpetuate them. He is almost the king bee of ruledom, Mr. Chairman, and the rule is proper. Of course, Mr. Chairman, a Member has to be absent sometimes, but by permission of the House, attending to his committee work—special hearing's rule—but he is still here in the Hall constructively, and the courts, I think, have so ruled, and the Speakers have also, I think, in questions of Members for assault and the bringing in of contumacious witnesses, and matters of that sort, saying, in effect, a committee is a branch of the House. But let that be as it may, the point I make, Mr. Chairman, is: All Members should be here and take it turn about in this floor work and not leave the House so as to put practically all the burdens of legislation upon a few faithful men who are daily here.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. With pleasure.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman in his researches been able to find out whether the attempted enforcement of this rule had any effect?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was getting to that when interrupted a moment ago by the gentleman from Ohio, and I will proceed to show that it did compel the attendance of Members.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman my recollection is—I was here at the time Speaker Crisp decided to enforce it—that the thing broke down of its own weight. It did not last a great while, and the whole thing went into what was called in those days "innocuous desuetude."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand. I am accused of digging up this "innocuous desuetude." I do that because I believe I am right, and I am quite sure the gentleman from New York will join in trying to relieve himself of his unceasing floor work here. I see that gentleman, rich with honors and blessed with the wisdom of at least the beginning of old age, coming here at 12 o'clock every day and staying until 5, 6, sometimes 7, looking after bills good, bad, and indifferent. The gentleman has asked me whether or not the enforcement of this law "broke down." In 1890 the House did not have a quorum, and the House would not adjourn. This resolution was offered by Mr. HAUGEN:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such Members as are now absent without leave of absence.

Mr. Buchanan, of New Jersey, a Republican, offered an amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to enforce the provisions of section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

This amendment was accepted. Then Mr. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, made an observation, and the present Speaker of the House, Mr. CANNON, made this reply:

Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that it would be a very effective——

The word "effective" is italicized in this report. I imagine Mr. CANNON italicized it by both manner and voice.

Effective way to procure the attendance of gentlemen.
Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes.

That is what the Speaker, Mr. CANNON, said and thought in 1890.

In 1862 Mr. Sumner said that the absenteeism of the Senate and House was so great that they could not keep a quorum, and this statute of 1862 was to compel them to remain and do business.

I want to state what Mr. MALLORY said on the floor of this House during the enforcement of that law in the Fifty-third Congress, as follows:

I believe that the regulation has worked well. I think it has done just what we have been striving vainly heretofore to accomplish; that is to say, to secure a quorum on the floor of the House at all times, and whether it is the law and whether it is just or right or not, I think it a good rule, and we would be guilty of a great wrong and be doing ourselves gross injustice if, after adopting the rule and adhering to it through the last and this session, we should now abrogate it. It would simply give an excuse for subsequent Congresses to do the same thing.

That is the language of Mr. MALLORY in 1895. Judge DE ARMOND in his report in the Fifty-third Congress, filed in July, said it had the effect to bring Members in. Then we have this statement of Mr. CANNON, our present Speaker, that it was an "effective" means of procuring the attendance of gentlemen here. Why, I will say to my friend from New York that since the news of the resurrection of this old statute by myself a few days ago went all over the country for the first time since the vote on the salary question some three weeks ago we had about 210 or 215 Members of the House a few days ago. The Speaker counted that many, but we have had a handful here to-day and for several days.

I think I have recently seen Members of Congress here who had not been here at all this session of Congress except to get their mileage, perhaps, and to get their salaries. Others have not appeared at all. I have seen Members here since I raised this question, Mr. Chairman, who were not here before. It is immaterial to me. I have been criticised and abused about my action in this matter, but I can not permit that to drive me from my post of duty. I have no feeling in this matter, absolutely none. I am doing my duty under the law which we all swear that we will uphold and enforce. Now, without any ill-feeling in the world, I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], and I want to say to my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who have in charge this criminal-code revision that we are to take up here in a few days, that certainly we should have at least a quorum here to revise criminal laws. Surely we should have all the Members here when we tear up the criminal laws of this country and put them back in place in about forty-eight working days, and do the balance of the business of this country. It is very opportune for this law to be enforced, and I hope it will be. And I want to say to these distinguished gentlemen, as I started to say, that we must have a quorum here to do that work.

I am not going to have the criminal laws of this country revised by a handful of Members. The people are not suffering for revised criminal laws. But the lawyers suffer because of unrevised codes.

You remember that in 1874 the "revisers" revised into our coinage laws a provision that stripped existing silver dollars of their legal tender, and but few knew anything about it. The revisers "changed" the "existing" law. In 1873 there was a "demonetization of silver," and even Speaker Blaine confessed he did not know the bill enacted did so. The "watchdog of the House," Mr. Holman, said the same thing, and a number of celebrities said the same thing. It is because, gentlemen, Members of Congress are not here during these dry debates, but the "whips" get them here by force when a roll call is expected. I know they are dry. I make a dry speech myself. I am a dry man, Mr. Chairman, in some respects. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. Are we to understand from what the gentleman states that he proposes to insist on a quorum being present?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I certainly shall insist on a quorum being present to revise the criminal laws of my country.

Mr. BURLESON. And the gentleman intends to make that statement good?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do, sir. If I can get the Speaker to stand with me and stand by the Constitution, I am going to have it.

Mr. BURLESON. I hope the gentleman may.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Texas will help me. I join hands with him on that.

I feel that it is my duty to do what I have done. I have done it without offending anyone, I hope, but if I have I want to say this, if anybody takes it as personal, Mr. Chairman, then they must simply take it, for I will not retreat or retract. I have stayed inside of the four corners of the RECORD, as I understand it. If I have misstated a single fact I will correct it if you will show me in error. I am standing by the law that the Democrats enforced and I am standing by the judgment on that law that a Republican Congress enforced, the Fifty-fourth Congress, that refused to refund this money. They refused by a heavy vote to refund it, and I remember what the present Speaker of this House said when that matter was up, and if I can turn to it promptly I will read it. His words are in the RECORD. He said that Congress had adjudged that this act of 1856 was the law and enforced it, and now if we go along and permit this appropriation to be allowed in this bill then it is repudiating that and repudiating the law and saying it is not the law. The House stood by that position and refused to appropriate this money. So, gentlemen, there is nothing partisan in this matter. Both Republicans and Democrats have enforced it. It is the law to-day. It is our duty to the people of this country to stay here, as a few of the men of this House have done, from the time the House is called to order in December, day in and day out, until it adjourns, except in case of sickness. There may be other proper excuses for leaving, but the grace of the House in that respect has been abused and the public service suffered.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this fight was fought out in the Fifty-third Congress. The Reed rules had been adopted in the Fifty-first Congress. The Democrats came in and in the Fifty-third Congress the Republicans made up their minds they should adopt the Reed rules, which Congress did. In the Fifty-third Congress Speaker Crisp issued that order docking Members. I was very prompt in that fight. I resisted that order. The act of Congress in 1854 gave to Members $5,000 a year salary, and that was not divisible at the option or by the decision of any Speaker of the House. Some men docked themselves; I did not. I had $7,000 in the office here and Speaker Crisp very kindly gave me a certificate, and I got it at the end of the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be well to spend time enough to find out what the facts are in regard to the so-called "docking of salaries." It would hardly be worthy of discussion now, I think, if it had not been for the fact that the newspapers have again taken up the subject recently and have been discussing the question as to whether these absences should be deducted for under existing law. In the Fifty-third Congress Mr. Crisp attempted to hold a quorum by enforcing section 40 of the Revised Statutes and requiring each Member to certify that he had not been absent from the House except in case of sickness of himself or in his family. Most of the Members simply changed that certificate and certified that they had "not been absent any time for which deduction could legally be made," and on that certificate most of them drew their salaries. There were a few exceptions. I remember where a gentleman from the West, whom I will not name, but who was then commonly known as "Uncle Joe," attempted to reason it out in his pay certificate. He put the statement in the certificate that he had been absent so many days and that he had been "absent by leave of the House;" but Mr. Speaker Crisp refused to certify his pay, so he lost $39.40. There was a report current here in the House at that time that in a subsequent conversation on the streets of the gentleman's home town two farmers got to talking about this circumstance, and one of them said: "I understand that 'Uncle Joe' is a losin' of his mind." The other one said: "No! What's the matter?" "Well, they say he ain't got sense enough to draw his pay." [Laughter.] That was a common story in the cloakroom here for some time. The gentleman lost his $39.40, which has never been paid.

When the question of payment of this previously deducted item came up in the Fifty-fourth Congress the House refused to allow the payment of this $39.40 in an appropriation bill, more for a joke on the Member who did not know how to draw his pay rather than for any other reason. It was voted out of the legislative appropriation bill in the subsequent Congress in a spirit of fun.

Now, let us get at the actual facts, and I will only detain the committee for a few minutes to call attention to what the situation really is, because there are many gentlemen in this House to-day who were not members of the Fifty-third Congress. This question has become ancient history. In 1856 the law was changed increasing the salary of Congressmen to $3,000 a year, with the provision that they should deduct for each day's absence, unless the absence was caused by sickness or sickness in their families. In 1873 the "salary grab," so called, was passed, in which the salary, including back salary, was raised to $7,500, and this old section of the act of 1856 was incorporated into the Revised Statutes. In 1866 the law had been changed, raising the salary from $3,000 to $5,000, without preserving the limitation of the section of the act of 1856 which provided for the deduction. Consequently, from 1866 to 1893, Congressmen all drew their full pay without deduction for absence. This section 40 of the Revised Statutes was repealed subsequently, and the repealing law provided that the compensation of Members be the same as in existence before the act of 1873. This repealed the provision as to deduction for absence, and every Congressman, from 1866 down to 1893, drew his full pay without deduction for absence, and Mr. Speaker Crisp, in order to force Members to attendance at a time when he was trying to hold a quorum, and in order to evade the necessity for adopting the Reed rules for counting a quorum, revived the operation of this old statute. After a long struggle Speaker Crisp was compelled to bring in a rule adopting the Reed rules, and we have been following them ever since, and no attempt has been made to revive the repealed act of 1856.

I will incorporate into my remarks the acts of 1856 and of 1866. The act of 1866 was revived by the subsequent act of Congress which repealed the $7,500 salary act of 1873. There was a division of opinion in the Judiciary Committee in the Fifty-third Congress as to whether or not section 40 of the Revised Statutes remained in force. Many eminent lawyers held that it was not. Judge Ray, of New York, afterwards the chairman of the Judiciary Committee; Mr. Stone, afterwards governor of Pennsylvania; Judge Broderick, and Thomas Updegraff, of Iowa, all gave it as their opinion, in a report to the House, that that provision had been repealed. Mr. Reed was of the same opinion. It was a debatable question, but Congress has invariably acted upon the assumption that when the act of 1873, raising the salary to $7,500, was repealed section 40 went with the repeal, and the act of 1866 was revived, and I doubt whether there is any gentleman on either side of the Chamber who has deducted a dollar from his salary in the present Congress or in the last or in any Congress since this flurry that occurred in the Fifty-third Congress. I think it is only just to the Members of this House, in view of the revival of this question, that these sections of the statute should go into the record for the convenience and examination of those who have been commenting upon the question. Those sections are as follows:

The act of March 16, 1856 (Stat. L., Vol. 11., p. 48) fixing compensation for Members of Congress, provides—

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $6,000 for each Congress, and mileage as now provided by law, for two sessions only, to be paid in manner following, to wit: On the first day of each regular session each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for the first session, and on the first day of each month thereafter during such session at the rate of $3,000 per annum during the continuance of such session, and at the end of such session he shall receive the residue of his salary due to him at such time at the rate aforesaid still unpaid; and at the beginning of the second regular session of the Congress each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for such second session, and monthly during such session compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, until the 4th of March terminating the Congress, and on that day each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive the balance of the $6,000 not theretofore paid in the monthly installments above directed."

The sixth section of that act, now known as section 40 of the Revised Statutes, provides—

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and Secretary of the Senate, respectively, to deduct from the monthly payments of Members, as herein provided for, the amount of his compensation for each day that such Member shall be absent from the House or Senate, respectively, unless such Representative, Senator, or Delegate shall assign as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family."

A joint resolution was passed by Congress, approved December 23, 1857, which changed the act of 1856 only in regard to the payment of all compensation which had matured up to the beginning of the sessions of Congress at the beginning of the Congress instead of at the end of the session.

In 1866 Congress passed an act relating to the compensation of Members (see Stat. L., vol. 14, p. 23), which provides—

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session."

When the Revised Statute as to $7,500 salary was repealed the repealing act provided that the law in force at the time of the passage of the act, which was incorporated in the Revised Statutes, and the law in force from 1866 to 1873, made no provision for deductions on account of absence.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well that there should go to the country in this connection a few words of explanation in regard to this subject which seems to have been the burden of the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]. I have heard a great deal of talk upon that topic, and about once in a certain length of time, in a sort of cycle of events, we hear sprung upon the floor of the House a suggestion in effect the same as that of the gentleman from Tennessee, and the country is liable to be very greatly misled about the matter of the absenteeism of the Members of the House of Representatives. People are very apt to read in the papers these fiery and eloquent and well-intended denunciations. Sometimes I have thought that they were made for home consumption exclusively, and were intended for effect neither upon the House nor yet to affect any conditions outside of perhaps a few Congressional districts.

I was a Member of the House of the Fifty-third Congress, and I had great respect for the Speaker of that House, Mr. Crisp. I think there is no Member here who served in that House who would go back to the system that was attempted to be enforced there. I do not say there was no such occasion, but I have no recollection that any Member asked for a leave of absence and did not get it without a word of hesitation on the part of the House. And when that condition exists in a House of Representatives, the question of deducting pay of the Members does not have the slightest effect upon the presence of the body of the membership. All a Member has to do is to file with the Speaker a request for leave of absence indefinitely on account of important business, and that is the end of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Did not the law formerly in force provide that no Member should be absent except from sickness—that is, if he was absent except from sickness his pay should be forfeited?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; that is very true.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that was the law. If any gentlemen were absent and were not excused, they were forced under this certificate to lose part of their pay.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; and I will tell you how that was done. It was one of the most simple propositions ever known to ingenious Congressmen. A Congressman then put his construction upon the law, and he put the word "legally" just before the word "deducted," and that was all there was of it. There never was one of those certificates that failed to be honored in the Speaker's room and in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Is it a very great misfortune to the country that Members of Congress do not stay always in the House of Representatives? I have seldom known any harm to come from it. Some of the wisest legislation we have had has been largely prepared in the committee room and brought in here, and, in a very large part, the work of Congress is done in the rooms of the committees. So that little good comes from forcing an attendance. And the attendance under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress did not average a satisfactory answer.

Then there is another thing. I am going out of Congress, and it doesn't make a particle of difference to me. I expect to be present every day until the end of this session, but I shall have to be a little better physically than I am now if I stay very closely. Does it sound well—and I appeal to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]—is it a nice thing for a body of gentlemen, elected throughout the United States and answerable to their constituents at home, men charged with the duty of legislating for the greatest country in the world, that they should be mustered, that there should be reveille in the morning and tattoo at night and "taps" finally when we go to bed, and have an orderly sergeant to report our presence or absence? For when the American Congress reaches that point, so that the constituency can not trust the Members of Congress to do their duty without interference of this sort of a provision, it will be time to consider some other sort of a House than the present one. The Members of this House are men of honor and do not need this system of espionage and censure.

I say it did not do any good, and if any man will take the proceedings of the Fifty-third Congress and read them carefully he will find there has been no Congress from that date that did more harm and less good than that one. The people got a chance at that Congress, and in the Fifty-fourth Congress the majority was changed into a very insignificant minority, and the business of the Fifty-fourth Congress rose up and blessed the country. I shall have something to say about that at a later date.

So I deem it absurd. The law has been ignored by common consent; it has been condemned by the common judgment of the House of Representatives. It has been ignored by the press and the country, and for the simple reason that there are plenty of Congressmen here to-day to do the work of Congress. We never have any serious difficulty in bringing together substantially the whole force of the House of Representatives when it is necessary. I think there is no body of men in the world that answers more promptly to the suggestion of the necessity for their presence on special occasions than do the Members of the House of Representatives. A circular from the whip on the Republican side, a circular from the Democratic whip on the other side, brings into this House at the specified time practically all the Members of the House who are in the city; and then the pairs that we have equalize the business, and there is little or no trouble. So I think that the provision suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], made, as it undoubtedly has been, in perfect good faith, and made under the distinct belief by him that he is doing a patriotic duty, in my humble judgment, Mr. Chairman, has nothing in it worthy of the consideration of the House of Representatives. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to ask permission to have printed in the RECORD views of the minority of the Judiciary Committee of the Fifty-third Congress upon the proposal to repeal section 40 that we have talked about this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave to print in the RECORD the minority views indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the matter referred to:

[House Report 1218, Part 2, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

SECTION 40, REVISED STATUTES.

July 13, 1894.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed. Mr. DE ARMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following views of the minority [to accompany H. R. 7274]:

A majority of a quorum of the Committee on the Judiciary have reported to the House with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7274) to repeal section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the undersigned, members of the committee, being unable to concur in the conclusion of those who favor the repeal of said section, very respectfully submit some of the views upon which they rest their dissent.

Section 40 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

"SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family."

The purpose of this provision of the law is so clearly apparent from a reading of the section itself that nothing is left for explanation or interpretation. Section 40 rests upon the proposition that Members of Congress are paid for attendance upon the sessions of the body to which they respectively belong, and for a discharge of their representative duties. Whenever, on account of sickness of himself or of a member of his family, a Congressman is absent from his post of duty in the House of which he is a Member, the law, as a matter of grace rather than of right, permits him to draw his salary, without diminution on account of his absence. But when absent otherwise than on account of sickness of himself or of some member of his family, the law requires a surrender of the compensation to which the Congressman would be entitled if present, discharging his public duties as a Senator or Member of the House. We do not see how this provision of the law can be challenged as lacking in justice or propriety. If a Member of Congress chooses to neglect his public duties to attend to private business or for personal recreation and enjoyment, there does not seem to be any injustice in requiring him to forfeit the salary which he might earn and might be entitled to, but which he prefers not to earn, and to which he certainly is not entitled.

It is known to all the Members of the House, as well as to the general reading public, that it was deemed necessary some months since to require the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to enforce the law as contained in section 40, in order to insure the attendance of a quorum of the Members of the House, and thus prevent unreasonable and inexcusable delay in the transaction of the public business. Hardly had the enforcement of the law fairly begun until certain Members made the valuable discovery, as they thought, that this section had been repealed by implication, and that, therefore, no law exists for withholding from absent Members a part of the salary, to the whole of which those present and discharging legislative duties are entitled. When the bill providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government was under consideration in the House, an amendment was adopted in the Committee of the Whole (where there is no roll call, and where Members can vote as they please without making a record upon which responsibility for their votes can be fixed), as follows:

"And it is hereby declared that section 6 of the act approved August 16, 1856, and section 40 of the Revised Statutes, have been heretofore repealed."

But when the yea-and-nay vote was taken upon this amendment in the House, on the 24th of last May, the amendment was rejected by a vote of 104 yeas to 128 nays. The record of this vote is found on page 6230 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of date May 25, 1894. Reference to it will satisfy anyone that the vote was practically a party vote. All the Republicans who voted upon the proposition voted in the affirmative to sustain the declaration that section 40 had been theretofore repealed, and nearly all the Democrats voting voted in the negative, thereby declaring, as the Committee on the Judiciary had reported, that the section had not been repealed, but remains in force. The correctness of the decision of the House, recorded on page 6230 of the RECORD, is fully and formally recognized in this bill now under consideration to repeal section 40, reported by the approving votes of those members of the Judiciary Committee who heretofore solemnly and at length advised the House that section 40 had already been repealed.

As before stated, the majority party in the House determined to insist upon the enforcement of the law as found in section 40, and as the result of that determination the law has been enforced for some time. The good results flowing from its enforcement are found, in part, in the larger average attendance of the Members upon the sessions of the House and in the more rapid consideration and dispatch of business in the House. It is believed by the undersigned that the reason and occasion for the observance and enforcement of the law is quite as great now as when this famous section was brought from the realm of disregarded laws, to which, possibly, the interest of Members of Congress and the complacency of officials of their creation had consigned it for the benefit of Congressmen and to the injury of their constituents. The present session, it is hoped, is nearing its end, and it seems to us that it would be folly in the majority—to employ no harsher or more expressive term—to deprive the House of this valuable and legitimate agency for maintaining a quorum. We believe that if this section be repealed, so that Members who choose to do so may absent themselves at will without forfeiting any portion of their salary on account of such absence, the House will often be without a quorum and therefore powerless to do business when there is the greatest occasion for dispatching business promptly. It is not to be wondered that the Republican minority are ready and eager to repeal a law which they so long disregarded, for they are not responsible at this time for the transaction in the House of the public business. That responsibility rests upon the Democratic party, having a majority of the Members of the House. This section can not be repealed, or its efficiency destroyed by amendment in the interest of absentee Members of Congress, unless a considerable number of Democrats join with the compact body of Republicans in Congress to repeal it or render it worthless.

In the report which recommends the repeal of this section 40, it is suggested that many Members evade the law by falsely assigning sickness as the cause for absence from the House. Without pausing to speculate upon this suggestion, and without knowing whether there are or are not sufficient facts to warrant it, we content ourselves with the observation that if Members are taking unearned money from the Treasury by a sacrifice of veracity and a violation of law, the cure for so gross an evil should be found in a more rigid enforcement of the law rather than in its repeal. And we are constrained to remark that if such disregard of truthfulness and violation of law may justly be imputed to any considerable number of Members of the House, it is much to be regretted that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and other custodians of the certificates of the several Members, upon which their salaries are drawn monthly, have seen fit to regard such statements as confidential, and have thus far failed to communicate them to the House and denied them to the public. A Member's statement, upon which his monthly allowance of salary is certified and paid, is in no sense a privileged communication or document, and in justice to him, if his statement is an honest one, and in justice to all the people of the United States, if it is dishonest, the statement should be made public. We believe that in this unauthorized and indefensible secrecy is found the basis for suggestions, whether true or false, that Members are drawing salaries to which they are not entitled, upon statements of which they should and, perhaps, would be ashamed. Whatever the facts may be, those facts ought to be made public, for the protection and justification of the innocent, as well as for the detection and condemnation of the guilty, if any.

We suppose no one will pretend that there is anywhere in the country, among any class of the people represented upon the floor of the House, a sentiment in favor of the repeal, or practical nullification by amendment, of this section 40. The legislation proposed in this repeal bill, as well as other legislation suggested to indirectly destroy this section, is in the interest of Congressmen, and in the interest of no other persons whatsoever. It seems a little strange, and is a symptom of which the people, we believe, will take note, that when employment is not easily secured by those willing to work, and when wages, in many instances, are insufficient, some Members of Congress will interest themselves to a greater extent in endeavors to obtain for themselves salaries which they have not earned but have voluntarily refrained from earning, than in efforts, by speedy, practical legislation, to lighten the burdens and better the condition of the masses of their constituents. Thus far the Democratic party has not lent itself, in committee or in the House, to efforts to enable Congressmen or others to filch from the Treasury money of their constituents to which they have neither moral nor legal right. It is hoped that the House, in passing upon the bill to repeal section 40, will regard the good of the public rather than the private, selfish interests of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Too many Members are away regularly and generally, though they visit the House occasionally. We do not believe they should have the same pay as other Members who lay aside private business, and deny themselves the attractions of the seashore and of mountain resorts, in order that they may be in the House, as a proper discharge of their duties require. Nor do we believe the present or other session should be prolonged at the expense of the public, to the inconvenience of the faithful, and for the benefit of delinquent Members. So long as the philosophy that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" holds good, section 40, or something practically equivalent to it, may well have a place in the law and be enforced, without apology or concealment.

I join in the foregoing as far as to say that section 40 ought not to be repealed.

T. R. STOCKDALE.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the consideration of the Army bill and the deficiency bill immediately following it has resulted in arousing a great deal of the combative character of Members, and in this moment of peace I would not ask the House to return to the consideration of this to-day, and therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 23821, the fortifications appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REVISION OF LAWS.

Mr. SMYSER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, from the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws, I submit the following bill and report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, from the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws, submitted a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23946) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Mr. CLAPP (for Mr. GAMBLE) presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 6619) granting a pension to Betsey Anderson; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10843) authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW.;

A bill (H. R. 128) for the opening of a connecting highway between Waterside drive and Park road, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 121) authorizing the extension of Seventeenth street NW.;

A bill (H. R. 8435) for the opening of Fessenden street NW., District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 14815) for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 14900) to extend Fourth street NE.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1566) for the relief of Isaiah Heylin McDonald, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ELEVATOR, GRAIN BUYING AND FORWARDING BUSINESS.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. McCUMBER December 5, 1906, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 3,000 copies of the testimony taken in the investigation, pursuant to Senate resolution of June 25, 1906, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a thorough investigation of the elevator and grain buying and forwarding business of this country to determine to what extent special favors have been granted to them by railroad companies; the influence which the alleged monopolizing of this branch of business has had upon the market; the injury it has worked to the grain producers; the extent to which the railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees own or control the grain-buying and grain-forwarding companies, and the manner in which these railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees secured holdings, if any, in these grain buying, storing, and forwarding companies, and to report the same to the Congress at its next session; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. WHYTE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 214) to provide for the printing of 16,000 copies of Senate Document numbered 144, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask that the joint resolution may be considered immediately.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides for printing 16,000 copies of the special message of the President of the United States concerning the Panama Canal, to be accompanied by a map to be prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 11,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the folding room.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH NALLY.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by him on the 10th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Elizabeth Nally, widow of Dennis Nally, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expense and all other allowances.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY AT VICKSBURG, MISS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14811) to authorize George T. Houston and Frank B. Houston to construct and operate an electric railway over the national cemetery road at Vicksburg, Miss., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That permission is hereby given to George T. Houston and Frank B. Houston, their associates, successors, and assigns, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain an electric railway over and along the national cemetery road at Vicksburg, Miss., from said city of Vicksburg northward to the northern boundary of the Government right of way for said road: Provided, That a minimum width of 30 feet of the roadway, over and above that used by the railway tracks, be left all along said road for a driveway, sidewalk, and gutters; that the licensees, their associates, successors, and assigns, shall repair all damage done to the Government roadway by the construction of their line of railway, and shall maintain their railway and said roadway within the tracks and for 2 feet on each side of the tracks in proper state of repair thereafter: And provided further, That said electric railway shall be constructed, operated, and maintained according to plans and specifications to be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, and under such regulations as may be prescribed by him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit me a moment, this is a bill to facilitate passage to and from the most beautiful cemetery perhaps which the National Government owns, and one of the greatest military parks. The bill was drawn in the office of the Secretary of War and has been approved by the Department officials and the cemetery people and everybody. I hope the Senator will not object to it. It passed the House, and it has been reported unanimously by the committee. It has been viséed by everyone concerned, and there is no objection found to it.

Mr. BURKETT. I have not had occasion to look the matter up at all, but I know that around the national cemeteries and parks the Government has secured in the past, for purposes which have been apparent, roads leading to them, and it has always been very careful to guard the approaches to the cemeteries.

Mr. MONEY. This bill was prepared in the office of the Secretary of War, and all those points have been attended to.

Mr. BURKETT. I shall not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED DRAINAGE INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. LATIMER. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report back, with amendments, a resolution, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution submitted by Mr. LATIMER June 25, 1906, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, was read, as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Whereas there is in the United States between 50,000,000 and 100,000,000 acres of swamp, tidal, and overflowed lands which are now, for lack of drainage, unproductive and a prolific source of malarial and other diseases, and the Secretary of Agriculture having for the past three years conducted drainage investigations in this country and abroad and has accumulated a large amount of valuable data on the subject: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit to the Senate on or before March 1, 1907, a report on drainage, to include the following:

First. The location and area of lands in the United States that are swamp and overflowed and susceptible of being drained and made fit for agriculture.

Second. The effect of drainage on such land and on the public health and upon agriculture.

Third. The area of land which has been drained under the laws of the different States and the benefits which have resulted therefrom.

Fourth. The summary of the legislation of the different States and of the legal and business methods under which drainage works have been constructed and maintained.

Fifth. A review of the drainage laws and policies of the leading agricultural countries of Europe and their results.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to look at the resolution before it is passed. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LATIMER. Under the rule it goes over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the Calendar.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF STATE AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to have printed as a document an address by Hon. Elihu Root before the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, Kansas City, Mo., Tuesday, November 20, 1906. It is a very important document on a very live question just now, and I should be glad to have it printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives with a duplicate certified copy of an engrossed bill (S. 4926) for the relief of Etienne De P. Bujac, the original bill having been lost.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return the bill (H. R. 18214) granting an increase of pension to John Ingram; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 21202. An act fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same; and

H. R. 21951. An act to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in the State of Alabama.

GENERAL SERVICE PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate bill 976.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 976) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the war of the rebellion, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] is prepared to make some remarks upon the bill at the present time.

Mr. WARNER. The matter was thoroughly presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and if the Senate is ready to vote upon the measure I certainly do not wish to occupy a moment of the time of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not prepared to state whether anyone wants to make any remarks on it. I certainly am myself prepared to vote on it, Mr. President, at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARNER. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during the consideration of this bill a few days ago I submitted an amendment making the amount precisely what the Grand Army committee on pensions has heretofore recommended. But since then I have talked with quite a number of Grand Army men in whom I have great confidence, and they have urged that if we are to pass a service pension bill at all it is going to make comparatively little difference in the cost whether the bill is passed in the form originally presented or with the amendment I offered. It will make no difference to start with. It will simply increase the amount slightly as the soldiers grow older and become more incapacitated for earning a living, and I agree that as the soldiers grow old and feeble they ought to be more and more generously cared for.

For that reason, Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of withdrawing the amendment that I offered to the bill, and hope it will pass in its original form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if the Senate is ready to vote on the bill, I will ask for a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll, and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years, $12 per month; 70 years, $15 per month; 75 years or over, $20 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now or shall hereafter receive a greater pension under any other general or special law than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill was unanimously reported.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no minority report, therefore?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no minority report.

Mr. SPOONER. I believe on a previous occasion the Senator from North Dakota made a statement of the amount involved, but I did not hear his estimate of the increased expenditure under the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is pretty hard to estimate. The estimate was made about a year ago and it is given in the reports. The estimate was that if all would make application at the present time, and would immediately draw the pension, it would be about $10,000,000, as I remember, without taking into consideration the unknown army, which might possibly bring it to $15,000,000. But as the Senator will see it will take some years for the beneficiaries to make their applications.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was not able to hear the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I may therefore repeat it to a degree, but I should be glad if the Senator in charge of the bill would tell us about how much in round figures it would increase the pension expenditures of the Government annually.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have just made that statement, but I will repeat it for the benefit of the Senator from Texas. The estimate was made about a year ago. At that time the estimate, without considering the unknown army, was to the effect that if everyone who would be affected by the bill could draw a pension immediately it would amount to about $10,000,000. My own judgment is that it may increase the expenditures from six to seven or eight millions during the coming year.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, one more inquiry of the Senator. I will ask the Senator if the effect of the bill is not to provide a service pension, pure and simple, after the age of 62 is reached?

Mr. McCUMBER. Upon application. In other words, the pension does not follow as a matter of course, but the claimant must make application to the Bureau.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there are no provisions, so far as I can tell by listening to the reading, either regulating or restraining the payment of fees by the pensioner to pension attorneys and agents. This being so easy a process, if the bill is passed, as it will be, it ought not to be left so that the pensioner falls into the hands of a pension attorney and is bled by him to a large extent for fees and services.

I ask the Senator in charge whether the general provisions relating to the protection of the pensioner against pension attorneys are ample to protect the pensioner in the case of this bill, and does the Senator believe that without some provision in this new bill the pensioner, as he must make application, will be left at the mercy of some pension attorney who acts for him? I should like to hear the Senator's views on that point.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am free to say that I consider the law as it now stands upon the statute book in reference to attorneys sufficiently applicable to all cases. But I will not be certain that it is, and I certainly should not object to the insertion of the same provision that is in the law of 1890 and has been in some other law. In the bill in reference to nurses we added it as a special provision, and it can also be inserted in the pending bill.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator, who has all the papers and statutes relating to this matter, can turn to it——

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the laws right here.

Mr. HALE. And will move an amendment I will be very glad to vote for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will grant me a moment I will get it.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move as an amendment, upon the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, to add at the end of the bill a new section, which will provide as follows:

That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing the introduction of a bill or the passage thereof through Congress granting pension or increase of pension under the provisions of this law.

Mr. HALE. That does not cover it.

Mr. WARNER. It should provide that he should have no fee for presenting the claim to the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is all that will be necessary.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to Senators who have the floor that we are entirely ignorant on this side as to what is going on except that we understand the pension bill is up. That is the only explanation we have had so far.

Mr. HALE. We are trying to perfect an amendment that will protect the pensioner from having an attorney fee exacted of him, and it takes a little time to get at it.

Mr. TELLER. What I want is that the Senators who are occupying the floor and taking part in the proceedings shall speak loud enough to overcome the confusion and noise in the Chamber, so that we may hear something on this side.

Mr. HALE. When we get the amendment perfected, which I think a valuable amendment and one that will command the support of the Senator from Colorado, we will have it read from the desk in a voice loud enough so that every one will understand it. There is a little delay, because we were getting the statutes in order to perfect the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. It is barely possible that we might afford some assistance in preparing the amendment, if we had an opportunity.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will have all the opportunity in the world after it is read from the desk. It may be quite likely an incomplete amendment when it goes there, and I should be very glad to have the assistance of the veteran Senator from Colorado in making the amendment a very good and complete one. The Senator in charge of the bill will present it so that it can be read at the desk, and then all of us can understand it.

Mr. WARNER. I would offer the following, to be added as a new section to the bill:

SEC. —. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing or presenting a pension claim under this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. That covers it.

Mr. HALE. That will cover it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 3, to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing or presenting a pension claim under this act.

Mr. HALE. Leave out the word "securing."

Mr. McCUMBER. "For presenting."

Mr. HALE. "For presenting to the Pension Bureau a claim under this act."

Mr. SPOONER. Would not that be so broad that it might leave it so that attorneys could not be paid for presenting a claim, but might be paid for securing it?

Mr. WARNER. The words "for presenting or securing" would cover it, according to my idea.

Mr. McCUMBER. As read at first it was correct.

Mr. HALE. I was wrong about it.

Mr. TELLER. I think it might be improved by inserting some provision that they should not recover for any services rendered. It seems to me that that would be better than to say for securing a claim.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary, at the request of the Senator from Maine, will again read the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pension under this act.

Mr. HALE. The word "securing" is there.

Mr. TELLER. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the Secretary read it the word "and" was used instead of "or." I think "or" should be used, so as to read "in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pension under this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The amendment to the amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I was not present when the Senator from North Dakota spoke upon the bill, and I wish to inquire whether the bill refers alone to soldiers in the civil war, or does it include the Mexican war and the Indian wars?

Mr. McCUMBER. It refers only to the soldiers of the civil war. The Senate has already passed a bill, which is now in the other House, granting to the survivors of the Mexican war a pension of $20 per month, and special bills have been passed for the benefit of the survivors of the Indian wars. So the pending bill refers only to the veterans of the civil war.

Mr. BERRY. What provision does it make for the Spanish-American war?

Mr. McCUMBER. No provision whatever, because it is not intended to cover those cases. They are all covered by the general law.

Mr. GALLINGER. And are young men.

Mr. McCUMBER. And they are still young men for the most part.

Mr. BERRY. And they have the same rights? This proposed law does not repeal the present law which affects them?

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator say that so far as the soldiers of the Mexican war are concerned, he believes they will be provided for at $20 a month?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should certainly hope that that would be the case. The bill has passed the Senate, and, of course, it is in the other House for action.

Mr. BERRY. If, however, the House should fail to pass the bill providing for the soldiers of the Mexican war, then the pending bill would give the soldiers of the civil war more than is now received by soldiers of the Mexican war?

Mr. McCUMBER. It would give those who are above 70 years of age more, but by the bill which has already passed the Senate, pensioning survivors of the Mexican war without reference to age, they will receive the highest amount that could be received under this bill after a claimant has reached the age of 75 years.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. What would be the objection to including the terms of the bill now pending in the other House, providing a pension for soldiers of the Mexican war in this bill, thus providing for the soldiers of both wars together?

Mr. McCUMBER. Inasmuch as we had already passed in the Senate a bill providing for the soldiers of the Mexican war, it did not seem appropriate that we should adopt the same provision again before the other House had an opportunity to act upon that bill. We should at least give the other House the opportunity to act upon that bill, and if they then prefer to put that provision in this bill, which probably might be the case, it would be a proper thing for them to do, if they do not wish to pass it separately.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to offer that as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], as I understand, has stated that the bill pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war was passed by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. McCUMBER. It passed the Senate at the last session.

Mr. BERRY. If I could get a copy of that bill giving soldiers of the Mexican war $20 a month, to save time in preparing the amendment separately, I should like to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill; so that if the bill providing for the soldiers of the Mexican war does not pass the other House and this bill does pass, those soldiers may also be provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that that is a bill that I introduced and which the Committee on Pensions agreed to. The Senator may get a copy of it by sending to the document room.

Mr. BERRY. I will send for a copy of the bill passed at the last session increasing the pension of soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, inasmuch as I am going to vote for the pending bill, I think we ought to have no concealment in reference to the cost, and I wish to read from a report made by the Committee on Pensions a portion of a letter sent to that committee, under date of March 28, 1906, by the present Commissioner of Pensions, in which he says:

> Referring to your question as to what extent such an act would increase the pension appropriation on account of the pensioners now on the rolls, it would seem that an additional appropriation of $10,714,400 per year would be required to pay the increased rate provided by the bill to the soldiers now on the pension roll.
> From an estimate made by the War Department in 1896, it would appear that on June 30, 1906, there will be 782,722 survivors of the civil war, and as the number of pensioners on the rolls at that date will not be over 675,000, there will then be over 100,000 survivors of the civil war not yet pensioned.
> This uncertain factor should be taken into account in preparing any estimates as to the number of beneficiaries and the cost of enactment of legislation, but it is manifestly impossible for this Bureau to state even approximately how many of these soldiers would apply for original pension under the bill, and equally impossible to estimate the additional cost that would be produced by such application. It is safe to say that under the terms of the bill at least one-third of the "unknown army"—

That is the 100,000 not on the pension rolls—> would file applications during the coming year, and that an additional appropriation of $4,000,000 would be required to pay them for the coming fiscal year, making a total cost of the proposed legislation for the year of about $15,000,000.

> The same additional amount would have to be added to the pension appropriation for some years; probably five years to come.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] properly says that these men will not all apply at once and that they will not all be granted pensions probably during the first year; so that it is likely that the estimate is somewhat high. Another thing, it was made a year ago, and there has been great mortality among the soldiers since then. The chances are, therefore, that the first cost will be somewhere in the vicinity of $12,000,000; but even if it costs much more than that it ought to be freely granted, as we can not well do too much for the brave men who saved the Government from overthrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator stated the estimate, as I understood, at $12,000,000 when all of them shall have made their applications.

Mr. GALLINGER. Most of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, that is practically the same as I stated some time ago. Possibly it may run up to $15,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I myself regret that the committee did not extend the benefits of this pension bill to practically all of the soldiers of the late civil war. It comes nearer being a service pension; and it seems to me it would have been just as well to have made it so. Of course I am not going to interfere with the text of this bill; I am heartily in favor of it; but I am not myself staggered, Mr. President, as some Senators appear to be, at the extraordinary expense of $15,000,000 a year. It may be that much and it may be a great deal more. Our pension list is large, and it has been large. It is a payment in most cases in accordance with the contract by which the soldier entered the Army. The soldier entered the Army with the agreement upon the part of the Government that, if disability occurred to him during the period of his service by reason of such service, he should be pensioned. I have never considered such a pension as a gratuity. I have considered it as a debt as sacred as the public debt, and I believe that is the feeling of the people of the United States. I do not believe you can find any considerable number of people in the United States who are finding fault with the pension list. I do not believe any administration—though I believe it has been attempted in one or two instances—ever derived any benefit from an attempt to decrease or keep down the pension list.

Mr. President, we may never have another war. I hope we may not; yet we may, and in the nature of things I suppose it is very probable we shall have. We will not pay, and no nation ever did, laborer's wages to the men who go to war. We furnished them with their food and clothing during the war, and we gave them, I believe, about $13 a month. During part of that time, Mr. President, the $13 we paid them was worth less than $7 in gold The prices which had to be paid by the soldiers' families at home for the commodities they used went often seven or eight times as high as prices had been when the soldiers entered the service. I might cite a single instance which I looked at the other day. During the war the average price of cotton cloth which was used in the ordinary soldier's family was about 30 cents a yard. It went as high as 45 cents at one time, but on an average the price was 29 cents and a fraction from the time the war began until its close.

Mr. President, that is but a fair sample of the prices of everything which the soldier's family consumed. I know, and you know, that the money paid to the soldier did not support his family at home, and that in a great many cases those families became a public charge, and, if not a public charge, a charge upon their friends and their neighbors. Such at least was the case in the section of country in which I live.

Mr. President, every little while some man foots up the tremendous expense of our pension roll. Those who do that forget to foot up the expenses incurred in war; they forget how very expensive all wars are. Every nation in the world when it goes to war knows that it is to be called upon for a vast expenditure of money.

I do not care, Mr. President, to go into the details of this subject, except to say, as I have repeatedly said here, that no man has a right to complain of the pension roll, and if the passage of this bill should require the expenditure of $15,000,000 a year, or $20,000,000 a year, or $25,000,000 a year, why, Mr. President, that would be a mere bagatelle compared with our vast expenditures, and when you consider the class of some of our expenditures.

Since we have got to be a great nation and a world power we ought at least to be willing to take care of the men who made us such. It was not the Spanish war that made us such, but when we established the fact that the American flag should float unquestioned and undisturbed over every mile of American territory—that is when we became a world power, Mr. President. We had not been up to that time, though we had been to a great degree even then; but that solidified us and settled the question of American sovereignty and American control of all the territory that we had ever claimed to be ours.

Mr. President, since that time we have been engaged in another war—not a very great war, and yet a war that has brought upon us an expenditure, which, if continued as it has been, will increase in a few years beyond even what the civil war cost. No man here can tell what the Spanish war cost. It cost some things that can not be counted in money. What the aftermath may be no man up to this time is able to say. If we are to take possession of Cuba and control it and exercise power over it, as some insist we must, and we are to continue the control of those islands of the Pacific sea at such a rate of expenditure as has been going on for ten years past, or nearly that, it will not be long before the cost will be greater than even that of the civil war.

Mr. President, I do not myself venture to say what has been the expense of controlling the Philippine Islands, but a few years ago the then senior Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, demonstrated on this floor that up to that time—and that was at least five years ago—we had expended $600,000,000, and the senior Senator from Texas, a few months later, demonstrated that we had expended $650,000,000. Mr. Edward Atkinson, a statistician of a good deal of repute in New England and in the United States generally, three years ago or more demonstrated that we had expended $800,000,000 in our efforts to civilize and enlighten the Filipinos. If we continue that effort, it will have cost, on an average, more than $100,000,000 a year since we have raised our flag in the Philippines. Mr. President, no man who stands for that ought to hesitate for a moment to vote for this bill and give to these soldiers of the civil war fifteen, twenty, forty, or even fifty million dollars a year, if they need it.

Mr. President, the State of Colorado, a new State that had no existence as a State until long after the close of the civil war, and hardly an existence as a Territory, supports now within her borders, open to every poor soldier who chooses to seek it, a Soldiers' Home as a place of final habitation of all that come to us. We pay those bills ourselves, and no man, no matter how poor or neglected, who has been in the American Army is obliged to go to a pauper house in that State; and such a man ought not to have to go to such a place in any State in the Union. No community ought to allow an ex-soldier of the Government of the United States, who took part in that great controversy—a controversy, I repeat, Mr. President, of more importance than any other civil war ever fought in the world—no State ought to allow such a man to go to a paupers' home or a poorhouse. This Government is rich enough and ought to be generous enough to give to every old soldier who has passed the age of 62 years, who needs it, enough for a living.

Mr. SPOONER. It ought to be just enough.

Mr. TELLER. It ought to be just enough—that is, the pension should be sufficient to his needs; it ought to be enough to comport with the character of an American citizen and an American soldier, and not a bare pittance to keep him alive.

I have not counted the cost; I do not intend to count the cost; and if any man should demonstrate here that the cost would be fifty or a hundred million dollars, I would say let us economize somewhere else and give to these old soldiers that which they deserve. I believe that an act of that kind would meet with the universal approbation of the intelligence of the American people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reading from the report of the committee showing the increase of appropriation that would be entailed if this bill should become a law, I had no purpose of raising any objection to the amount, as I then stated. I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that if the increased expense involved were a much larger amount the time has arrived for a service pension bill for the survivors of the late civil war, and I also agree with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that the time has fully arrived for increasing the pensions of the few survivors—a small remnant—of the war with Mexico.

I introduced a bill some time ago proposing to increase the pensions of those old men to $30 a month. It was amended and passed at $20 a month, and was sent to the House of Representatives. There is a special reason, to my mind, why the soldiers of the war with Mexico should be included in this bill. In the other House they have two committees on pensions. Pension bills growing out of the war of 1812 and the war with Mexico go to one committee and bills relating to the wars since the war with Mexico go to another committee; so that if we pass this bill without including the Mexican soldiers the bills will be in the hands of two committees, and one may be reported out and passed and the other may not.

The Mexican survivors are but a remnant—a very small remnant—of those who fought in that war. In 1905, on June 30, there were 4,540 remaining soldiers of the war with Mexico. That was all.

Mr. CARMACK. How many?

Mr. GALLINGER. Forty-five hundred and forty; and they were dying with great rapidity. Six hundred and eighty of them died during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and in the six months following June 30, 1905, 500 more died. So that it is entirely within the bounds of probability to say that there are not more than 3,000 of those soldiers remaining at the present time. Some of them are on the pension rolls now under special acts at rates ranging from $20 to $30 per month. They are all beyond the age of 75, and if they are included in this bill, they will all get $20 per month. If there are 3,000 of them, the only addition to the bill will be $280,000 to start with, and their pensions will be wiped out in a very few years, probably almost entirely so in five years. So that I hope the amendment, which I understand the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is to offer to the bill to include the soldiers of the war with Mexico, may be agreed to unanimously, and that it may become a part of the bill.

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator to allow me just to make an explanation.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I merely desire to call attention to the fact that we have just passed a bill through the Senate providing for a pension of $20 to each of the survivors of the war with Mexico. The pending bill was reported last April. Had the bill in regard to the Mexican war veterans run as long as this and been reported at the present time, we would undoubtedly have included the Mexican war veterans within the provisions of the pending bill. I have no objection to the amendment, but am inclined to agree to have it inserted.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, on page 2, line 23, of the bill, after the word "rebellion," I move to insert "or in the Mexican war."

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that under the present Mexican pension law the pensioner is required to have served only sixty days. The pending bill requires a service of ninety days. I suggest that the Senator frame his amendment so as to meet that condition.

Mr. CARMACK. I will do that, Mr. President. In the meanwhile, I have another amendment I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have the amendment which the Senator has just offered stated, so that we may see how the bill will read when it is inserted.

Mr. CARMACK. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] I will change the amendment so as to read as follows:

That any person who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late civil war or sixty days in the Mexican war——

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have no objection in the world to, but am heartily in favor of, the amendment for the Mexican war veterans, and hope it will be passed unanimously by this body, but, in order to save this matter, why not, instead of the amendment that is now offered, strike out "ninety" where it occurs in the bill and insert "sixty;" so that the same service provision will apply both to the civil and the Mexican war veterans?

Mr. CARMACK. I was not attempting to change the report of the committee with respect to the soldiers of the civil war, but simply to make the provision with respect to soldiers of the Mexican war conform to the provision of the existing law with reference to them. The law now provides a service of sixty days for soldiers in the Mexican war.

Mr. WARNER. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I am not insisting upon my suggestion at all. Personally, I think ninety days is a short enough term of service, but it has been sixty days with reference to the Mexican soldiers. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. I leave it sixty days with reference to the Mexican soldiers.

Mr. WARNER. Yes; I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert the words "or sixty days in the Mexican war," so that, if amended, the paragraph would read:

That any person who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion or sixty days in the Mexican war, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that he say "the war with Mexico" instead of "the Mexican war."

Mr. CARMACK. I was following the language of the other bill. However, let it read "war with Mexico."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I was going to suggest another amendment, and that is that instead of the "war of the rebellion" it be made to read "civil war." That is the term, I think, usually employed. It would not be my definition of the war exactly—neither expression would—but the term usually employed is the "civil war." It is employed in all official documents, I think, in the President's messages and elsewhere. I move that amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that was the amendment which I had risen to offer when I yielded the floor to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood it was the understanding in the committee that the word "rebellion" should be stricken out.

Mr. CARMACK. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment I propose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, before the word "war," it is proposed to insert "civil," and in line 23, to strike out the words "of the rebellion."

Mr. BACON. I suggest that the amendment, rather, should be that wherever the words "war of the rebellion" occur in the bill they shall be stricken out and the words "civil war" inserted in lieu thereof. That would include the title and the body of the bill. It occurs several times.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think it occurs elsewhere.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to the amendment. The usual term that has been used heretofore was "war of the rebellion."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota accepts the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, before the Senator accepts that amendment I have a suggestion to make. I think it should be "war between the States," as it was a war between the States. It was in no sense a civil war; it was a war between sovereign States, and if you want historical accuracy, instead of being called "war of the rebellion" or "civil war"—neither of which it was, but a war between the States—it ought to be called by that term. I suggest that the amendment be amended so as to call it the "war between the States."

Mr. CARMACK. I said, Mr. President, in offering this amendment, that I did not offer it as embodying what I considered a correct definition or description of that war; but I was simply conforming to what I believe has been the best practice and the usual descriptive words as employed in legislation and in official documents.

Mr. SCOTT. We can not hear the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MONEY. I was not criticising the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee is not heard.

Mr. CARMACK. I was just saying that in offering this amendment I was not undertaking to give a definition of that war that would be satisfactory to myself. I said that in offering the amendment. But I have no hope that the Senate would accept any definition that I might give. I was simply trying to make the language of the act conform to what I believe has been the best practice in legislation generally and in official documents, notably in the President's messages. The war between the States is usually spoken of, I think, as the civil war. It sounds a little bit better, I think, than "war of the rebellion," though I agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that it was not a civil war any more than it was a war of rebellion.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I did not hear the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] when he offered his amendment. I certainly did not intend to criticise his phraseology or his understanding of what the war was, nor do I intend to criticise anybody's understanding of what that war was. I should be quite content to have it "the war of the rebellion." It makes no difference to me. Words do not change facts at all; but as there seems to be an effort here to represent it in the proper way, in language that belongs to it, it ought to have the right name. It should be "the war between the States." It was not a civil war and it was not a war of rebellion. It was a war between sovereign States, and they each carried their own banners, which were captured in war and have been restored.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state, Mr. President, that there could not be the slightest objection to the use of the term "civil war" instead of "war of the rebellion." I think it is probably, at this late day at least, the better term to use. But I can not agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that the designation of "war between the States" would be proper. It was not a war between the States; it was a civil war in every respect. Many of the States had soldiers on both sides, like the State of Kentucky. The State of Kentucky was as much on one side practically as it was on the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. Tennessee and Missouri were the same way.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was in all respects a civil war. The same remark might apply to all the border States, and I am glad for one to adopt the new designation of "civil war."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that this was a war between the States. It was a civil war. As stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], States that were in amity with the Government furnished a very large number of soldiers to the Confederacy. Kentucky, Maryland, and Missouri did so.

Mr. CARMACK. Tennessee.

Mr. TELLER. Tennessee.

Mr. CARTER. North Carolina.

Mr. TELLER. North Carolina. So it can not be said to have been a war between the States.

Then, in addition to that, those warring States, if they were warring States, entered into a confederacy and established a new government. It may possibly be said that it was a war of the Confederacy against the United States, but it was not a war of the States. The war was not conducted by the States.

Mr. President, it is not very material whether you use the term "rebellion" or whether you do not. I insist that the term "rebellion" is a proper term. It describes the condition which existed from 1861 to 1865. It may be an offensive term; and yet it was a rebellion against the Government of the United States. We have called it a civil war. It was a civil war. At first there was a disposition to feel that those people were not entitled to be treated as warriors under the rules of national war. But it was found to be so great a war that they must be so treated. They were so treated by foreign governments, as well as by our own.

When the war closed there was no treaty between the States and the General Government. There was no recognition of State lines at all. In every respect the war was treated as a war of citizens of the United States against the General Government. It will go down in the history of the world as a rebellion of States, in the first instance, because the States did act. Then it became, in the highest sense of the term, a civil war, a conflict between individual citizens of the United States, and upon that theory when the war was over the Republican party declared that each of those States had practically abandoned its organization.

Upon that question I do not care to take much time. I was disposed myself, although an ardent supporter of the war, to believe that we ought to have recognized the existence of the States, upon the theory that the States had not gone out of the Union at all, and that the difficulty had arisen by the action of the individual citizenship of the States and not by the States.

However, the party in power at that time did not so recognize the condition and the States were finally brought back into the Union, as it was said, which, according to my theory, they had never been out of.

I do not think it very important whether we call it the war of the rebellion or the civil war. I do not believe that now or at any other time will we be inclined, or the people of the United States will be inclined, to change the character of the war by declaring it to have been a war between the States. It was a war against the General Government by citizens of the United States who were in rebellion against the authority of the General Government at that time.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have not a particle of feeling about this matter. As I stated in my remarks, I have no objection to the term "war of the rebellion," if Senators wish to use it. I merely said that if you are going to change the term, you should employ that term which has in its favor the greatest degree of historical accuracy.. It did happen that States withdrew from the Union; that the States raised regiments as States, and that the States appointed officers. It was a war between a number of States in the United States and a number of States in the Confederacy. I do not consider, having been a rebel from start to finish, that there is any particular odium in that phrase. George Washington was a rebel.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. And so were all the heroes and patriots who established this Government. Some of them were slaveholders, including George Washington. There is nothing opprobrious in the term "war of the rebellion." If it suits the fancy of Senators to call it by that name, it does not hurt me. I am quite accustomed to it, and I do not mind. But I was simply suggesting phraseology to meet the history of the case better. If Senators want to call it the civil war, they can do so. We contend it was not a civil war. It is quite true that men in Tennessee to the number of 32,000 went into the Federal Army, and I believe every single Southern State, except the State of Mississippi, furnished a regiment to the Federal Army. Mississippi furnished one, which was called the "Tigers." It was not composed of Mississippians, but of the fragments of regiments—the sick and wounded Federal soldiers at Vicksburg. But Mississippi was as wholly rebel, to use a common phrase, as any State could possibly be.

Kentucky and Maryland and Missouri sent the very flower of the Confederate army into the field. The best fighting men I ever saw came from those States, for the reason that they were not compelled to go to the front by local opinion, but went to the front contrary to that opinion, as many of them had to run the lines to get there, and they made all kinds of sacrifices.

I admit that if I had been in Massachusetts I would have been in the Federal Army, and I guess if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] had been living in my town he would have been a member of my company; and I am not at all blaming anybody for the attitude he took at that time.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up time, but I happened to be at the door of the lobby of the Senate one day not long ago. It was at the last session, near the close. There was ex-Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, as gallant a soldier as ever went to the field, now on crutches as the result of wounds inflicted by Confederate soldiers. He was shot three or four times. He called to me. I did not recognize him on account of my bad sight. We shook hands. I said: "What are you doing on these sticks, Blair?" He said: "You fellows hit me pretty hard three or four times, and it is beginning to tell on me since I have been getting old." He said: "Did we get you?" I said: "Once; not much." He said: "Are you not glad you got it?" I said: "I do not know. I have not regretted it." He said: "I am glad I was hit." We shook hands. He said: "Any man who was worth being hit ought to have been there either on one side or the other. If you had been in New Hampshire, you would probably have been in my regiment." I agreed that it was a great deal a matter of environment.

I make these remarks to show that I do not care anything about the criticism. I make them merely in the interest of historical accuracy.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask what amendment, if any, is before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed in line 22, page 2, to insert the word "civil" before "war;" and after "war" to strike out the words "of the rebellion;" so as to read "during the late civil war."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. I do not yield the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. I wish to correct a statement just made at the desk. I wish to call attention to the fact, for the information of the Senator from Maine, that I moved to amend by striking out the words "war of the rebellion" wherever they occurred in the bill and inserting "civil war."

Mr. CARMACK. I accept that.

Mr. HALE. One object I had in rising was to suggest that wherever in the bill the words "war of the rebellion" occur they be stricken out and the words "civil war" inserted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may, I call the attention of both Senators to the fact that the words "war of the rebellion" occur but once in the bill.

Mr. BACON. They appear in the title. So the term does appear twice.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does appear in the title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will have to be amended after the bill shall have been disposed of. The Chair understood the Senator from North Dakota to accept the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, as modified by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is accepted.

Mr. HALE. I so understood.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I wish to state that this language, the "war of the rebellion," is improperly in the bill. As a member of the committee, when the bill was first being considered by the Pension Committee, I suggested that "civil war" should be substituted for "war of the rebellion," and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] made the motion that that change be made. The motion was carried in the committee, and "civil war" should appear in the bill instead of "war of the rebellion." I presume that the words "war of the rebellion" got in by some oversight on the part of those copying the bill in the committee. I doubt not the chairman of the committee will recall the fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. Simply replying to the Senator I will say that I remember distinctly that the question was brought up, but I think it was in reference to another bill, and the phraseology was changed then and there. I think the Senator is in error about it applying to this bill. But that was the sentiment of the committee, and if it was applicable to any other bill, it is equally applicable to this, and we accept it now.

Mr. CARMACK. The title of the bill ought to be amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will come up after the bill is passed.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I, of course, did not intend to precipitate any debate here on the question of the war of secession. If I had, I would have proposed a very different amendment from the one I offered. I think there is no profit in such discussions. My only object was to have used a term which I believe has become accepted on both sides of the Chamber and has been allowed heretofore to go without debate.

It is needless for me to say that I do not agree with the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that it was a war of rebellion or a civil war. I do not agree with him as to what history will say about it. But nothing we can put in this bill will change what history will say upon the subject.

I remember reading some time ago Lodge's Life of Daniel Webster, in which the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said that in the early days of the Republic nobody questioned the right of a State to secede from the Union; that such was the opinion of the very men who framed the Constitution; and I believe that impartial history will say that under the Constitution as it once existed secession was a constitutional right. I am glad that it is no longer a right. It is a doctrine that never will be asserted again and I am very glad of it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that the term "rebellion" is not a degrading term. I agree with him that George Washington and our other ancestors who fought in the Revolutionary war were rebels against the British Government. My ancestors on both sides—my father and my mother—were there. It was not considered at the close of the late war as a term contemptuous to speak of a man as having been a rebel. When a man rebels he is a rebel. The right to rebel is the dearest right that a freeman has. The right of revolution, which includes rebellion, is all that is left many times, and it is all that has saved liberty to the human race on innumerable occasions. I only wished to have it distinctly understood that the term was descriptive of the act. It has been so for all times, for hundreds of years.

Cromwell and his soldiers were guilty of rebellion against the King, as were other British people on different occasions when the Government of Great Britain has been disturbed by the demands of the people for their dearest and best rights.

When the late war was over we amended our Constitution, and the Senator from Wisconsin calls my attention to it. I had forgotten that the words were in the Constitution, but here they are. We treated it then as a rebellion. I am going to read it:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a Member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House remove such disability.

I know that upon various occasions Congress has removed the disabilities, and the people who were named in the acts accepted it.

The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions, and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

I do not suppose anybody will on that account attempt to change the Constitution, although the term may be objectionable to some. I do not believe Senators who engaged in the civil war ought to object to being called "rebels" at the time. They are not rebels now. I was not in the Army. The Senator from Mississippi thinks that if I had been in Mississippi I would have been with him. Environment determines those questions to a great extent. I have never brought an accusation against any man who felt it his duty to go into the Confederate army, and I know that men of as high character as there are in the country, or ever were, went into the Confederate army. I accorded to them what the American people accorded to them—honesty of purpose. They were fighting for their convictions. I would have been in the Northern Army if I had remained in the State of Illinois a week or ten days longer. I endeavored, as the records of the War Department will show, to raise a regiment in the State of Colorado, and was told by the Department that we were too far away; that they could not take troops from so great a distance.

I do not know that any good comes from a discussion of this kind—probably it does not—but in the interest of the truth of history it is sometimes necessary to say things that otherwise might be left out.

I wish to say a word or two more. When the war was over, I was one of those who felt—I got the idea from a study of the history of the world—that it was not possible for us to treat our antagonists as public enemies. We could not maintain here a government such as we supposed we were to maintain under our Constitution and laws unless we accorded to them the full rights of citizenship. We did that in a very short time; and no man can charge me with ever hindering or delaying or deferring in the slightest degree that era of confidence and harmony which now exists.

Mr. President, the world will always take notice and the student of history will take notice of the fact that no people ever had a civil war in which the bitterness and hate of it disappeared as they disappeared in this country after the close of that greatest of civil wars of any age in the history of the world. England, with all her civil wars, was torn and disturbed for generations, while to-day there is in one section of our land as much fealty to the flag as in any other, and the men who carried their muskets in battles as Confederates are as loyal to the Government of the United States and its institutions as the men who fought on the side of the Government. They are as proud of our history. They are as proud of our present condition

When we got through, when the war was over, the world had an exhibition of courage and ability such as no nation had ever presented, and no man who is an American need to have been ashamed, if he was a Confederate, of his northern opponent, and no northern man need to have been ashamed of his Confederate opponent. Mr. President, in the history of the world there has never been such a display of courage as was manifested on the battlefields that I could name, not one battlefield, but numerous battlefields. The cold steel, that is seldom felt in battle, was on hundreds of occasions presented to the breasts of the combatants on both sides, and they fought like Americans, and when the war was over they submitted like Americans, and we have been living and will continue to live in all future time as Americans, for that great cause of disturbance, which could only probably have been got rid of by war, no longer disturbs us and there is nothing to prevent the American people, eighty millions of them, from being harmonious and homogeneous. Great as the war was, and as much as it cost, the price was none too great to pay for the final consolidation and conciliation of the American people and the spectacle we now present to the world of a people not divided, but united.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to say anything on this occasion that would tend in any manner to disturb the very gratifying condition of harmony which exists throughout the Republic or the marked fraternal relations now found among Senators in this Chamber, and I would say nothing at this time but for the fact that for the second time the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] bases his contention upon what he expresses as his desire that the truth of history shall be spoken and be recorded. It is solely for that purpose that I say a few words upon the subject as to what should be the proper designation of the war.

I think that in this bill the language that has been agreed upon, viz, "the civil war," is the proper language, because it is the generally accepted language. I think the war in some senses was a civil war; in other senses it certainly was a war between the States, and the fact that the victorious party assumed that the result of that war was an overthrow of the government of those States substantiates that view.

But I think in a larger view it was a civil war, and that is the accepted language, and I think it is the proper language to be used in this bill.

But, sir, what I rose particularly to say is that I do not think the term "rebellion" is a proper designation of that war, nor have I any belief or apprehension that history will so record it. If it is not a proper designation the word "rebellion" should not be permitted to remain in this bill. It should be stricken out, and the words "civil war" should be substituted therefor. It is true, as asserted by the Senator from Colorado, that George Washington was a rebel; it is true that Oliver Cromwell was a rebel; but in each instance there was a rebellion against a recognized constituted authority, an effort to destroy by force a theretofore undisputed authority to govern without the consent of those who sought to overthrow it. It was not a resistance to a rule, the authority of which to govern without consent was disputed and had never been conceded. It was in each instance an appeal to force and not a claim of legal right. There is no question of the fact that Washington and all those who cooperated with him owed allegiance to George III and were subjects of George III. There is no doubt about the fact that Oliver Cromwell owed allegiance to Charles I and was a subject of Charles I.

The question out of which what we now designate as the civil war grew was a disputed question from the foundation of the Government; and in that dispute, during the earlier years of the Government, much the larger weight of authority and opinion was on the side that a State could determine whether it would or would not remain in the Union.

There was on the part of the people of the States no recognized or conceded authority of the General Government to compel a State to stay in that Government against its will. On the contrary, as has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], in the early years of the Government it was generally conceded directly to the contrary, and it was for years disputed by the few only that the question of the remaining of a State within the Union was a question for the State to determine.

Without going into anything like an extended discussion of the question, I will call the attention of the Senate to a most remarkable incident in the history of this country, one not very generally known, and I confess I have been surprised, since my attention was called to it, that I had not previously known of it.

Some time, I think about the year 1830—I have forgotten the exact year—there was a very remarkable libel case tried in the city of Boston, in which Daniel Webster was the prosecutor and a man whose name I have forgotten, a prominent man, was the defendant. In that suit the prosecution was based on an alleged libel against Daniel Webster, the great advocate of the doctrine of the supremacy of the Union and the great advocate of the maintenance of the Union. There could have been no case in which he could have been more directly interested or in which every utterance must have challenged his attention, because the prosecution—it was not a civil suit, but a criminal prosecution—grew out of an alleged libel against Daniel Webster, charging him with having been in active sympathy with those prominent influences in New England which opposed the war of 1812 and threatened secession on account of that war.

I have a book, unfortunately not now at hand, which was sent to me by a gentleman in Boston, Colonel Benton, who prepared a history of that libel suit, in which there is not only a narration of the suit, but there are also copious extracts from the record, among other things, of the argument in the court, the opinions of the court, etc., and in the course of it, with Daniel Webster an interested party present, the fact is stated, not as an individual opinion, but as a conceded fact and principle of the Government, I think by the court, or in the argument in the progress of the case, that it was the right of a State to secede; and Daniel Webster present and the proposition having a most material bearing upon the case in which he was so deeply and personally interested, and neither he nor any other person present challenged the statement that such was a generally conceded proposition.

Now, I do not mention that for the purpose of contending that there is now such a right, because that question has been settled by the highest of all tribunals, in the arbitrament of war, but I cite it simply as an illustration of what has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee and repeated by myself, that in the earlier years of the Government, even as late perhaps as 1830—I have forgotten the exact year, but it was subsequent to the Administration of Monroe, I am sure of that—in a case where the great expounder of the Constitution and the great advocate of the Union was so directly interested, that assertion was accepted as true and passed even without challenge by him.

Mr. CARMACK rose.

Mr. BACON. I will yield in a moment, if the Senator will pardon me until I finish the sentence.

Therefore I say that the term "rebellion" is not a proper designation. A rebellion is resistance to an acknowledged authority. A rebel has no claim of right except the right of force. The South claimed the right of law. Mr. President, it was a much greater war than a war of rebellion. It was a great war between the people of the foremost nation now and among the foremost nations then of the earth, on a great question about which they had been divided for nearly a hundred years, in which war there was no resistance to a recognized conceded authority, but in which there was an insistent and a great struggle over the question as to what was the intention of the Government from its foundation. It was a war in support of a claim of legal right—claimed on the one side and disputed on the other. It was a war not of a rebellious faction, but one between two great peoples who were made one indivisible people by the result of that war.

The Senator from Colorado says that every one who was a Confederate soldier should acquiesce in it and be willing to abide by the designation of the war as a rebellion and of himself as a rebel. I was a very humble soldier in that war—a Confederate soldier—and I object to the designation because it is not correct, and not being correct it is more or less offensive.

Mr. President, what the Senator from Colorado has read from the fourteenth amendment, in using the word "rebellion," proves nothing, except that in the heat and tempest and blaze of ill-feeling—I started to say of hate but softened the word—which was imediately consequent upon the war, terms were used, both at the North and South, which were designed to be offensive and odious. The term "rebellion" is odious, and what is odious must be in a degree offensive. But however it may have been as to individuals, that intense ill-feeling did not long continue among the people either North or South. But nevertheless it is proper to say in the truth of history that the South is in no wise responsible for the occurrence of the word rebellion in the fourteenth amendment. That amendment was not adopted in practical fact by legislative bodies, but was written into the Constitution by the swords' point.

I will now yield to the Senator from Tennessee with pleasure.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator has passed from the point he was on when I wished to interrupt him. I simply wanted to say to the Senator that when I said that in the early history of the country the right of secession was universally conceded, I stated also that that was the opinion expressed in a careful historical work of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BACON. That is correct. I had intended to mention that, and I am glad that the honorable Senator from Tennessee has suggested it in this connection.

Mr. President, we are now engaged in no discussion which involves any acrimony or ill feeling, and nothing is further from my purpose than to utter any word which can arouse such feeling, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to another fact connected with the war which illustrates the position that it was not a rebellion. Search history and find a case where at the conclusion of a great rebellion there was perfect acquiescence thereafter, especially by any great, vast number of people as those were who were concerned in that war, and without the slightest effort thereafter by even any small fragment of such people to revive the struggle.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate—and I am glad in this high place and in this presence to do it, in order that it may go out to the country and to the world—to the fact that from the day Lee surrendered at Appomattox to the present day, among all the millions of people who were on the side of the South, people who could not have been more earnest and intense than they were in that struggle, people who had sacrificed every material interest, people who had sacrificed with lavish prodigality things which were infinitely dearer and immeasurably more precious than any material interests, and who would have sacrificed still more if there had remained more to sacrifice—among all those people, in not one single instance, even in any remote out-of-the-way corner, has there ever been heard a whisper of a conspiracy to revive that struggle or to renew the contest. Rebels are never conciliated under defeat. They submit to superior force, but they watch for the recurrence of the opportunity to again strike a blow for its overthrow.

The fact to which the Senator from Colorado alludes as a most remarkable fact, as to the absolute conciliation, the perfect restoration of harmony between the people of the North and the people of the South being unexampled in the history of the world, a restoration as complete as it is prized both by the South and the North, is due to the fact that it was not a rebellion. It is due to the fact that it was a struggle, a gigantic, titanic struggle over the great fundamental question of this Government about which our people had been divided from its foundation, which could only be finally settled by war and which when so settled was regarded as settled forever. If there had been a rebellion, there would have been mutterings thereafter. There would have been conspiracies thereafter. There would have been in this locality or that locality movements for restorations, or rather for a revival of the contentions which had led to the struggle. There would have been secret bands here and organizations there keeping alive the embers of war with the purpose to again fan them into a fierce and destructive blaze. But on the contrary, having been a fair, square, stand-up fight between the people of the two sections as to the construction of the powers of the Government upon this great fundamental question whether the Union was or was not devisible, when that fight was ended the result was accepted by all the people of the South as a finality, and there was no more of the spirit which would have remained or of the action which would have followed if it had been simply a rebellion. It was a much greater war than a rebellion. It was a gigantic war under the shock of the battles of which the earth quaked and the very mountains rocked. It will not rank in history with rebellions. As I have already said, it was a war between two great peoples, made two peoples by the existence of the war, but by the result of that war made forever one great indivisible people and nation. We have had rebellions in this country; the whisky rebellion, and Bacon's rebellion, and two or three little things of that kind. They are properly called rebellions because they were rebellions against constituted, recognized, and conceded authority, dependent upon no consent of those who resisted such authority. This was a great war between contending parties on questions upon which there always had been a difference, and in support on each side of legal right, as claimed by one and the other.

Now, Mr. President, I would not say anything to revive any ill feeling as to what happened after the close of that war. There are some things I might say, but I refrain. I am glad that it is all over, and I am willing for it to be buried with the past, and, if remembered, to be remembered only to be forgiven, whatever there may have been of wrong on either side. It is true, as stated by the Senator from Colorado, that there has been perfect reconciliation, and I thank God for it. It is true that those who fought over what they considered to be the right on their side on a great question of difference now recognize that question as settled, and that there are no more loyal people under the flag than those who sought to set up a separate government under what they conceived to be their right, and in advocacy of their side of that controversy which had lasted from the foundation of the Government.

I think it is necessary, Mr. President, to say this much, not for the purpose of reopening any of the contentions of the past, but because if we had passed by what the Senator from Colorado has said as constituting the truth of history not only would it have been the tacit recognition of a statement which we deem to be incorrect in law and fact, but it might have led to a conclusion on the part of others that there was acquiescence in the correctness of such statement by those of us whom it most deeply concerns.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, only a word.

In my State of West Virginia, at the battle of Rich Mountain, a Confederate soldier was killed. He was taken to his little mountain home and the friends gathered to give him proper burial in the churchyard. He was buried with the Confederate flag wrapped around his coffin.

In 1898, in the war with Spain, his son enlisted and was a volunteer under the flag of the United States. He went to Cuba and was killed at the battle of San Juan. His body was brought home to the same little cabin from which his father had been carried out some forty years before, and the neighbors gathered about the body of that young man and he was buried in the churchyard with his father. Wrapped about his coffin was the flag of a united country—the Stars and Stripes.

I believe there is not a Senator on the other side who will not agree with me that the difference between the States is represented in those two graves where the father and the son were buried, and where the friends gathered about those two graves in that country churchyard, each having died believing that he was right.

I believe that my friends on the other side agree that this bill is a proper measure to be passed. Now, let us pass it; let us get results, and let us bury the past as the father and son were buried in the country churchyard of West Virginia.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the purpose I have in rising is to have some change made in the phraseology of a part of the first section, on page 3, line 20. I think the word "receiving" ought to be inserted after the word "now."

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not understand the Senator. At what point in the bill does he desire to make the change?

Mr. PATTERSON. On page 3, line 20, the word "receiving" ought to be inserted after the word "now," so that it will read:

That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension, etc.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On line 20, page 3, after the word "now," it is proposed to insert the word "receiving," so as to read:

That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I wish to state that the part of the section that commences on line 20 to the end of the section is somewhat obscure to me. I am not certain as to its meaning, and I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to the matter that troubles me. It reads:

That no person who is now or shall hereafter receive a greater pension under any other general or special law than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

Is it meant that if a person now receiving a pension greater in amount than is provided for in this act he will not be pensionable under this act?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the intention, that he will draw his pension under the other act.

Mr. PATTERSON. Suppose he is now receiving a lesser amount under another act, would this permit him to receive a larger amount than he is now receiving?

Mr. McCUMBER. Then he can receive under this law the highest amount that he will be entitled to, according to his age.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is, he may be pensioned under this act and yet apply for a higher pension under another act, and when he receives the higher pension he ceases to draw the pension under this act?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, sir; that is the understanding and the intention.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think it was well enough to make that clear, because otherwise there might be some doubt as to the meaning.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that as far as I am concerned I am heartily in favor of this measure, and that to my mind the passage of this bill through the Senate is an exhibition of the very highest quality of patriotism. The Senators from the North and the Senators from the South have differed upon names, but if I can judge from the expressions that have come from this side of the Chamber, when this measure is put to a vote every Senator from the South will be found joining with the Senators from the North in paying a high tribute of their regard and respect to the soldiers of the North who combated their people on the field of battle and by whose bravery and devotion to the cause of the Union the South lost the cause that to them at that time was so dear to their hearts. I think it is an exhibition of patriotism (and no other word would express it in my opinion) that is rarely found in legislative assemblies under conditions like this.

Mr. President, I wish to say one word about the name that should be used to designate what is called by some the war of the rebellion and by others the civil war. To my mind, if the purpose is to be historically accurate, it would be designated the war of secession, because what the South contended for was the right of their States to secede from the national compact. Prior to the war the people of the several Southern States met in convention and adopted ordinances of secession, and in pursuance of those ordinances their Senators withdrew from this Chamber in couples and their Representatives, as a rule, withdrew from the other Chamber en masse. It was a war to establish the right of secession, and if the war had been successful, it would have simply established that under the compact, or the Constitution, States had a right to secede, and in pursuance of that right thirteen of the States had seceded from the Union and had established a separate and independent government.

The war was in the nature of a rebellion, and to a certain extent it was a civil war, but in the broad sense, in the full sense, it was a war of secession. When the South lost the war, when the National Government succeeded as against the government that was set up in the Southern States, what was established was that the States could not secede and had no right to secede.

The result of it is, Mr. President, that we find the Southern States restored to the Union, with their geographical limits undisturbed, except in the case of one State, Virginia, that was divided into two States during the existence of the rebellion. The relations of the States to the General Government have not been changed in the slightest degree. The decision was that they could not secede. Therefore they did not secede, although the effort was made to secede. And when the war ended, after certain preliminaries that were essential in a proper settlement of the trouble, after the end of armed conflict upon the field, the States were restored to their orbit in the Union, and they are there to-day; and, as the Senators from the South say, that was a settlement that is to continue forever.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and in the war with Mexico."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 23551. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ETIENNE DE P. BUJAC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to furnish a duplicate certified copy of an engrossed bill of the Senate (S. 4926) for the relief of Etienne De P. Bujac, the original having been lost, and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with.

JOHN INGRAM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (H. R. 18214) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John Ingram."

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, is compelled to be absent from the Chamber for several days and desires to address the Senate before his departure upon Senate resolution 142, relating to the right of the Senator from Utah to a seat in this body. I ask therefore that that resolution may be laid before the Senate to enable the Senator from Illinois to make some remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, called up by the Senator from Michigan.

The Secretary read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That Reed Smoot is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. CULLOM. Before my colleague proceeds, I wish to state that I gave notice yesterday morning I would call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill this morning immediately after the routine business. I was prevailed upon by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to yield to him, as he had previously given notice of a desire to dispose of the service-pension bill and unanimous consent had been given to him to have the bill brought before the Senate to-day. I therefore yielded, although I think the appropriation bill would have a preference even under those circumstances. My colleague now appeals to me. In view of the fact that he is compelled to go away, I will yield to him for the purpose of addressing the Senate upon the resolution reported by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. But I give notice that if my colleague gets through before night I shall call up the appropriation bill and ask the Senate to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, in determining the question whether REED SMOOT is entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Utah, it is necessary, as it seems to me, to first learn what power, if any, the Senate of the United States has over the State of Utah in the selection of the men whom that State sends to this body to represent her in all matters of legislation.

Can the Senate fix the qualifications of the Senators of any State in this Union?

Can this body arbitrarily determine the eligibility of its members from the different States?

Are there no constitutional or other limitations upon the Senate in arriving at the eligibility of a United States Senator from Utah who presents his credentials here under the seal of the State which he is authorized to represent in this legislative assembly?

The States, before the adoption of the Federal Constitution, were independent sovereignties. That great instrument which now unites what would otherwise be forty-five separate and independent sovereignties provides the qualifications of a Senator from any one of these States. Paragraph 3, section 3, Article I, of the Constitution reads as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of that State from which he shall be chosen.

All who are familiar with the Madison papers containing debates on the Federal Constitution will remember that that language was adopted after a most extended and learned debate in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. Some of the best legal minds in the Convention were opposed to placing any qualifications in the Constitution regarding either Representatives or Senators. They proposed to leave it to the States to determine the qualification of the men whom they would send to either branch of Congress. Mr. Dickinson, in the course of the discussion, said that he was against any recitals of any qualifications in the Constitution; it was impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the legislature from supplying omissions. Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, whose remains were recently removed from North Carolina to the State of Pennsylvania, after nearly a hundred years reposing in the soil of a foreign State, in the debate that resulted in the adoption of the language that I have just quoted from the Constitution, said:

> And besides a partial enumeration of cases will disable the legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters.

Mr. Madison, however, sometimes called "the Father of the Constitution," took a directly opposite view. He contended that the qualifications of United States Senators should be stated in the instrument that created such officers, and stated that to leave it to the legislature would vest an improper and dangerous power in such a body. He held that "the qualifications of the elector and elected were fundamental articles in the republican government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution." It was his opinion, drawn from experiences of other countries and especially that of England, that that power, left in the hands of the State legislatures, might by degrees subvert the Constitution.

I call Senators' attention to the debates in the Constitutional Convention to show that the language that was ultimately adopted was not expressed as we find it in the Constitution without due deliberation and careful thought on the part of the framers of that great instrument; and that the construction that they placed upon it was that the qualifications called for in the instrument itself negatived the idea that any other qualifications could be exacted either by the Senate itself or by any one of the States.

Paragraph 1 of section 5 of Article I reads as follows:

> Each House shall be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members, etc.

It has sometimes been contended that the language broadens the power of the Senate in determining the eligibility of a member and enables it to fix whatever qualifications, in the judgment of the particular Senate, shall be deemed proper and just. This construction, as it seems to me, is not sound when we come to examine carefully the language of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution.

In section 2 of Article I of the Constitution the qualifications of a Senator are given and section 5 only goes to the extent of clothing the Senate with the sole power of determining whether those qualifications have been complied with. In other words, section 5 of Article I precludes the idea that a contestant for a seat in the United States Senate could successfully claim before any of the courts of the country, either State or Federal, that his successful competitor for the position of United States Senator was not, for example, 30 years of age, or that he had not been nine years a citizen of the United States or that at the time that he was elected United States Senator he was not an inhabitant of the State from which he was chosen.

Section 5 places the power entirely in the Senate of the United States to determine whether these qualifications have been complied with; and whatever a court might say respecting any one of the questions above enumerated, the Senate itself would not be hampered by any such decision, but could have these qualifications inquired into and itself determine whether the Senator is eligible under those qualifications.

The Federalist has ever been regarded as entitled to great weight in determining the proper construction of the different sections and articles of the Constitution which are discussed in that great work. No. 60 of the Federalist, which was written by Alexander Hamilton, places the same construction upon the qualification of Senators for which I here contend, and asserts that no other or different qualifications than those can be exacted. In speaking upon this subject, he said:

> The truth is that there is no method of securing to the rich the preference apprehended but by prescribing qualifications of property, either for those who may elect or be elected. But this forms no part of the power to be conferred upon the National Government. Its authority would be expressly restricted to the regulation of the times, the places, the manner of elections. The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution and are unalterable by the Legislature.

Text writers and many of the courts of last resort of the several States have held to this construction. In the case of Thomas v. Owens (4 Md., p. 223) the court says:

> Where a constitution defines the qualifications of an officer it is not within the power of the legislature to change or superadd to it unless the power be expressly or by necessary implication given to it. It is a fair presumption that where the Constitution prescribed the qualification it intended to exclude all others. (Paschal's Annotated Constitution, second edition, p. 305, sec. 300.)

The Hon. John Randolph Tucker, for many years a Member of Congress from the State of Virginia, and always regarded as a great authority on the Constitution, in a work of his which has been published since his death, called "Tucker on the Constitution," in speaking on this very topic, said:

> Nor can the Congress nor the House change these qualifications. To the latter no such power was delegated, and the assumption of it would be dangerous as invading a right which belonged to the constituent body and not to the body of which the representative of such constituency was a member. (Tucker on the Constitution, p. 394.)

Mr. Justice Story is one of the first and greatest authorities on the Constitution of the United States. His works have been quoted in this country and in England as of the highest authority on the different questions that he discussed relating to the Constitution of the United States. In speaking of the qualifications for office, he said:

> It would seem but fair reasoning upon the plainest principles of interpretation that when the Constitution established certain qualifications as necessary for office it meant to exclude all others as prerequisites. From the very nature of such a provision the affirmation of these qualifications would seem to imply a negative of all others. (Story on the Constitution, sec. 625.)

Foster on the Constitution is a work that deservedly ranks well with all students of the Constitution. He says:

> The principle that each House has the right to impose a qualification upon its membership which is not prescribed in the Constitution if established might be of great danger to the Republic. It was on this excuse that the French directory procured an annulment of elections to the council of five hundred, and thus maintained themselves in power against the will of the people who gladly accepted the despotism of Napoleon as a relief. (Foster on the Constitution, p. 367.)

Indeed, Mr. President, I think I am justified in saying that every lawyer of standing and every student of constitutional history of any learning has admitted that neither the Senate, Congress, nor a State can superadd other qualifications for a Senator to those prescribed by the Constitution.

It has ever been held, both in and out of the Senate, that the States could be trusted to send fit and proper men to this body. The Constitution fixed the age limit at a period where the Senator would have experience and matured judgment. His citizenship was fixed at a period sufficiently long to thoroughly familiarize him with the institutions of our country, and the fact that he must be an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen provided against any influence outside of the State limits in selecting other than a citizen of the State.

In the earlier days of the Republic Senators were called and regarded themselves as ambassadors from the States they represented in this body, and met here as such to confer respecting legislation that would result in benefit to their common country.

The thirteen separate sovereign States that had recently gained their independence from England would any one of them have scorned the idea that Senators whom they selected to represent them could have qualifications other than those prescribed by the Constitution, fixed by the legislative body to which they were elected and were to become a part. Virginia did not consult Massachusetts as to the character or fitness of her Senators to represent the great State of Virginia in the first Senate that assembled under the Constitution of the United States, and when Massachusetts came to select her representatives in this great body she did not consult South Carolina as to whether that State or the Senate itself would be satisfied with the character and quality of men whom the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts had designated to represent her in the first Senate that assembled under the Constitution. They met, as I have already said, in the spirit that they were ambassadors from the State whose credentials they held, and while they legislated for the common good they never forgot in any of their deliberations the interests of the States that had honored them by selecting them as their Senators.

The power that is given the Senate under the Constitution is not to create Senators, but to judge of their qualifications. The States create the Senators. The qualifications to be judged are those, as I have already stated, prescribed in the Constitution itself. If the Senate find those qualifications exist in the applicant for a seat in this body from any given State, then, under all precedents, such Senator is entitled to take oath of office and take his place among the members of this great legislative body.

Senators, as such, are not civil officers of the Federal Government. It has been held ever since the adoption of our Federal Constitution that Senators are officers of the States. The Federal Government does not send them here to legislate for it; it has no power or authority, as such, to designate a single member of this body. It is utterly powerless to create the office of a United States Senator, and it is equally powerless to require any one of the States of the Republic to designate any particular individual as a Senator from such State.

The Federal Republic is a nation of delegated powers, and among these powers that are thus delegated by the several States to the Federal Government is not found anything relating to United States Senators. The States alone send Senators to this body to legislate for them and for the Federal Government. This doctrine, Mr. President, is not new; it was announced by this very body more than a hundred years ago, in the case of William Blount, of Tennessee. The history of this case is familiar to many of the Senators. He was a Senator from the State of Tennessee from 1796 to July 8, 1799. During that period it was claimed that he engaged in treasonable correspondence with a foreign nation and was guilty of a high misdemeanor. Articles of impeachment were voted against him by the House of Representatives and duly presented to the Senate of the United States, and Mr. Blount was called upon to make answer thereto. He employed as his counsel Jared Ingersoll and Alexander J. Dallas, of Philadelphia, two of the most distinguished constitutional lawyers in the United States. They were men who were in the forefront of their profession and whose learning and ability would make them leaders of the bar of the United States at any period in its history. They had made a careful study of the Constitution of the United States, and when they presented Mr. Blount's defense in answer to the articles of impeachment presented by the House of Representatives, they interposed in his behalf the following plea:

> That although true it is that he, the said William Blount, was a Senator of the United States from the State of Tennessee at the several periods in the said articles of impeachment referred to, yet that he, the said William Blount, is not now a Senator and is not, nor was, at the several periods so as aforesaid referred to, an officer of the United States, nor is he, the said William Blount, in and by the said articles charged with having committed any crime or misdemeanor in the execution of any civil office held under the United States or with any malconduct in civil office or abuse of any public trust in the execution thereof.

This plea, Mr. President, was interposed to the articles of impeachment which charged him with this misdemeanor of the treasonable character that I have already referred to while he was a Senator of the United States. His learned counsel by this plea raised the very point that I have briefly discussed—that as a Senator of the United States from the State of Tennessee he was not an officer of the United States, and therefore that the Senate had no jurisdiction to try his case.

He also interposed a further defense, as follows:

> That the courts of common law of a criminal jurisdiction of the State wherein the offenses in the said articles recited are said to have been committed, as well as those of the United States, are competent to the cognizance, prosecution, and punishment of the said crimes and misdemeanors if the same have been perpetrated, as is suggested and charged by the said articles, which, however, he utterly denies.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that in formulating his defense these eminent lawyers took the position that the Senate of the United States had no jurisdiction to try him for the crime charged.

These defenses were argued at length by the learned counsel who represented Mr. Blount and were discussed by the Senators themselves. The two propositions that were advanced by Mr. Dallas and argued at great length and successfully are as follows:

> First. That only civil officers of the United States are impeachable and that the offense for which an impeachment lies must be committed in the execution of a public office.
> Second. That a Senator is not a civil officer, impeachable within the meaning of the Constitution, and that in the present instance no crime or misdemeanor is charged to have been committed by William Blount in the character of a Senator.

I have not the time nor inclination on this occasion to follow at any length the arguments that were made pro and con upon the propositions raised by Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Dallas, as stated by me here. It is sufficient to know that weeks passed, and after this full and elaborate argument, and the Senate of the United States, sitting as a court of impeachment, had fully deliberated on the question, on the 11th of February, 1799, determined as follows:

> On motion it was determined that—
> The court is of the opinion that the matter alleged in the plea of defendant is sufficient in law to show that this court ought not to hold jurisdiction of the said impeachment and that the said impeachment is dismissed.
> Monday, January 14. The court being opened, the parties attending and silence being proclaimed, judgment was pronounced by the Vice-President as follows:
>
> "Gentlemen, managers of the House of Representatives, and gentlemen of counsel for William Blount: The court, after having given the most mature and serious consideration to the question and to the full and able arguments urged on both sides, has come to the decision which I am now about to deliver.
> "The court is of opinion that the matter alleged in the plea of the defendant is sufficient in law to show that this court ought not to hold jurisdiction of the said impeachment, and that the said impeachment is dismissed."

From that day to this it has never been seriously contended that a United States Senator is a civil Federal officer of a character that would enable the Senate to impeach him for high crimes or misdemeanors for any act of his during his service as such Senator.

A Senator is amenable to the courts of the country for any crime the same as any other citizen; and, as was contended by Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Dallas in the Blount impeachment case, the proper forum to try a Senator for a crime or misdemeanor is in the State or Federal courts.

That a State can not add any qualifications other than those prescribed by the Constitution of the United States has been decided repeatedly by this body. One of the notable cases was that of Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, my predecessor in office. Mr. Trumbull was elected a Senator from Illinois and took his seat in this body on the 4th day of March, 1855. A protest was filed by certain senators and representatives of the legislature of the State of Illinois against his election as a United States Senator, and the question of his eligibility and his right to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate.

The protestants in the case of Senator Trumbull alleged that he was elected a judge of the supreme court of Illinois in June, 1852, for a term of nine years; that he was duly commissioned and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such judge; that in May, 1853, he resigned this office to take effect July 4, 1853; and that on February 8, 1855, he was elected to the Senate of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1855.

The constitution of the State of Illinois at that time provided:

> The judges of the supreme and circuit courts shall not be eligible to any office of public trust or profit in this State or the United States during the term for which they are elected, nor for one year thereafter; all votes for either of them for any elective office except that of judge of the supreme or circuit courts, given by the general assembly or by the people shall be void.

Under this clause of the constitution the protestants insisted that Judge Trumbull was ineligible for the office of United States Senator. This question was carefully considered by the Senate, and after elaborate debate on the question as to whether the State of Illinois could superadd a qualification to that contained in the Constitution of the United States, it was determined by a vote of thirty-five to eight that the State could not; and the resolution offered by Senator Crittenden, as follows—

Resolved, That Lyman Trumbull is entitled to a seat in this body as a Senator elected by the legislature of the State of Illinois for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1855—was adopted by a vote of thirty-five to eight.

It is interesting to note, Mr. President, the men who voted in favor of seating Senator Trumbull under the conditions that I have briefly and imperfectly expressed. Those who voted in favor of the resolution that Senator Trumbull was entitled to a seat in this body are as follows:

Adams, Allen, Bell of Tennessee, Bright, Brown, Butler, Cass, Collamer, Crittenden, Dodge, Durkee, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foote, Foster, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, Wilson, and Yulee.

The Senate will note that some of the greatest lawyers of the age and some of the most distinguished statesmen whose lives grace the history of our country voted in favor of the proposition that Senator Trumbull was entitled to his seat. In the course of the debate on this resolution Senator Crittenden said:

We are to look to the Constitution of the United States for the whole frame of this Government. It has created all the powers and all the instruments of this Government. It has created the Senate. Before this creation neither the State of Illinois as such nor any other State in the Union had any power to elect a Senator. There was no such office to be filled by them as Senator of the United States. Their agency was simply employed by the Federal Constitution. The agency of the legislatures of the several States was employed to elect Senators who constitute this body. It is an all-important branch of the Government. The designation of the power that was to elect, the designation of the persons qualified to be elected, all entered into the very essence of the subject. All this was to have its influence on this Government. All and every single circumstance of this was to have its influence in connecting the State governments and the General Government and in connecting them in such a way as to preserve that species of political relations between them which it was thought would operate most advantageously to all.

This was the view of the framers of the Constitution of the United States. It was a subject for them whether the legislature should elect Senators, whether the people should elect them, or whether the governors of the several States should appoint them. All this was within the competency of the framers of the Constitution. Neither people nor governors nor legislatures had previously any power to elect or appoint a Senator. There was no such officer; there was no such power. The whole was a new creation. The Constitution determines that the power to choose Senators shall be in the legislatures of the several States. The power to elect Senators was committed to the legislatures. Who shall they be, was the next question. The question was how to designate a Senator by some prescribed qualification, so as to fix the class from which he should come. Shall he be a man who is required to possess any particular amount of fortune? Shall he be a man who must be subjected to some religious test? Of what age shall he be?

Were not all these points fairly presented to the framers of the Constitution of the United States? Were they not important questions to be acted upon and decided? They were framing the Government. The Constitution of this body was an essential part of the Government. That was to depend on the parties, or the condition of the parties, out of whom they would make this great council of the nation. Should he be a citizen? Might they select him anywhere? Should he be an inhabitant of his State? Might he be of any age?

All these subjects being considered, the Constitution of the United States decides upon the whole matter by providing that each Senator shall be of the age of 30 years, shall have been at least nine years a citizen of the United States, and shall be an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen.

Now, sir, does this not embrace the whole subject? Does it not regulate the whole subject? According to the plain meaning of the Federal Constitution every inhabitant of a State, 30 years of age, who has been nine years a citizen of the United States, is eligible to the office of Senator. What more can be said about it? It is now supposed by those who contend that Mr. Trumbull is not entitled to his seat, that it is competent for a State, by its constitution—and I suppose they would equally contend by any law which the legislature might from time to time pass—to superadd additional qualifications. The Constitution of the United States, they say, has only in part regulated the subject, and therefore it is no interference with that Constitution to make additional regulations. This, I think, it will be plain to all, is a mere sophism, when you come to consider it. If it was a power within the regulation of, and proper to be regulated by, the Constitution of the United States, and if that Constitution has qualified it, as I have stated, prescribing the age, prescribing the residence, prescribing the citizenship, was there anything more intended? If so, the framers of the Constitution would have said so. The very enumeration of these qualifications excludes the idea that they intended any other qualifications. That is the plain rule of ordinary construction; but, for a reason above all technical considerations, it is applicable here. The object of the Federal Constitution was to have a body framed by a uniform rule throughout the United States, coming here to constitute this great council of the country—coming here by the agency of the same elective power, the State legislatures—coming here under the same requirements and with the same qualifications—and standing here upon a perfect and exact equality in all respects to represent the nation justly and equally, and with a sole regard to the common welfare of the Republic.

This argument of Senator Crittenden has been held sufficient to forever put at rest the idea that a State could add any qualifications to that of a Senator of the United States other than those prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and since then men who have been disqualified under the constitution of their States have been repeatedly elected to this body and admitted to a seat and a share in its deliberations without question.

My distinguished colleague, who has so long and so honorably represented Illinois in this body, when he first came here as a Senator from Illinois, was laboring under this same alleged disqualification that was urged against Senator Trumbull, but his right to his place in the Senate here was never questioned by any member of this body.

So, Mr. President, I think it is unnecessary for me to multiply cases demonstrating the fact that the individual States have no power to add any qualification to a Senator other than that prescribed in the Federal Constitution. It is equally clear, in my judgment, Mr. President, that this Senate has no constitutional authority to inquire into the antecedents and the early career and character of a Senator who comes here for admission with the credentials of his State.

The theory of the fathers of the Constitution was that the legislators of the State, who are directly amenable to the people of the State, would elect fit men to represent such State in the Senate of the United States. It was not supposed by the framers of that great instrument that the Senate of the United States would sit as a court of inquiry or an inquisition to investigate the career and character of any man whom a State might see fit to honor with a seat in this body.

It was left by the Constitution of the United States to each State to determine the character of the men whom they would prefer to represent them as United States Senators. I am well aware, Mr. President, that there have been different views expressed on this question by Senators in the discussion of the eligibility of Senators who have applied here for admission to a seat in this body; but I make the assertion, after a careful study of the cases that have been considered by the Senate from the adoption of the Constitution of the United States to the present time, that no Senator has ever been denied a seat in the Senate of the United States because of any lapse in his career prior to his being selected by his State as such Senator.

A notable instance is found in the so-called "Roach case." Senator Roach, as many of the Senators who are now serving in this body will remember, presented his credentials as a Senator from the State of North Dakota and asked for admission to represent that State as a United States Senator in this body. After taking the oath of office it was discovered that in his earlier career he was connected with one of the banks in the city of Washington, in the District here, and, as such officer, embezzled quite a large sum of money, and that he was charged to be a fugitive from justice. The question was raised and elaborately argued as to whether that disqualified him from holding his seat in the Senate as a Senator from North Dakota. After an elaborate discussion of this subject and an examination of the precedents covering the entire period of our national history, without any vote being taken upon the subject, Senator Roach was permitted to serve out his time as a United States Senator in this body.

I think, Mr. President, that this example, so recently before us, has settled forever the question that the Senate will not undertake to revise the judgment of a State in determining the character of man whom the State shall select as a United States Senator. The Senate will content itself with what occurs while such Senator is a member of this body. If the conduct of the Senator is such as to lower the standard of the Senate or to bring it into disgrace, or if the Senator be guilty of any misdemeanor that would bring this great legislative body into disfavor, the power exists under the Constitution of the United States to expel such a member.

Paragraph 2, section 5, of Article I of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Ample power is given in this provision of the Constitution to protect the high character of this great legislative body. While the Senate, as I have shown, can not add qualifications to those prescribed in the Constitution for a Senator from any State; and while the State itself can not superadd other qualifications; and while the Senate itself, by a long line of precedents, has established the fact that the previous career and character of the Senator must be determined by the State that sends the Senator to this body, still after he becomes once a member he must deport himself in a manner consistent with the dignity and high character of the Senate of the United States or he will become amenable to this provision of the Constitution which I have just read and which will enable the Senate itself, if his conduct be such as to warrant it, to expel the member by a two-thirds vote.

In the case I have just cited from North Dakota, had the embezzlement charged to Senator Roach occurred during his term of service the Senate would clearly have been warranted in expelling him as a member from this body.

Any disorderly behavior that tends to bring reflections upon the Senate in any form or at any time while the Senator is a member of the Senate will be sufficient, in my judgment, to warrant the Senate in taking the course prescribed by the Constitution in expelling a member.

The considerations which I have here presented, Mr. President, will indicate to the Senate the limitations within which the Senate itself can inquire into the question as to whether REED SMOOT is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States.

It is conceded by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the very able, and, indeed, I may say remarkable, speech which he made here the other day in support of his contention that Senator REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat in the Senate, that he possesses all of the qualifications spoken of in the Constitution itself—he is over 30 years of age, he has been more than nine years a citizen of the United States, and he was an inhabitant of the State of Utah at the time he was elected by the legislature of that State a Senator of the United States.

It is also conceded, Mr. President, not only by the able chairman of this committee, but I think by all who are at all familiar with the case that was presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that Senator REED SMOOT is not a polygamist; that he has never married a plural wife, and has never practiced polygamy; that he is a man in his personal relations as son, husband, father, and citizen above reproach; that in all of the relations of citizenship he has lived a singularly pure and upright life.

Why, then, should he be expelled from this body, disgraced and dishonored for life, a stigma placed upon his children, his own life wrecked and the happiness of his wife destroyed? He is a Christian gentleman, and his religious belief has taken him into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called the "Mormon Church."

I shall refer later in my remarks, Mr. President, to the arraignment of this church by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan. It is my purpose now, however, to challenge the attention of the Senate to charges that were originally made against Senator SMOOT, that resulted in the investigation which has culminated in the resolution now pending before the Senate respecting Senator SMOOT's seat in the Senate. There were two petitions presented to the Senate, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, protesting against REED SMOOT retaining his seat in the Senate of the United States. One was signed by Mr. Leilich. This protest charged that REED SMOOT is a polygamist and that, as an apostle of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly called the Mormon Church, he had taken an oath of such a nature and character as that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator. No person appeared before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to support these charges. Judge Tayler and Mr. Carlisle, who conducted the case against Senator SMOOT before the committee, disclaimed any connection with these charges, and I think I am safe in saying that both of these distinguished lawyers claimed that there was no truth in either of the charges made. They conceded before the committee that Senator SMOOT is not a polygamist and never has been. It is also equally clear, Mr. President, that he has never taken an oath as apostle of his church of a nature and character that disqualifies him from acting as United States Senator.

I feel sure that neither the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections nor any of the people who sympathize with the position which he holds in this case will contend for a moment that there is an apostolic oath which has been taken by Senator SMOOT which disqualifies him from discharging the duties of the high office of Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

The real charges that have been considered relate more particularly to the protest that was signed by W. M. Paden and a number of others, which charged in substance that he is a member of a self-perpetuated body of fifteen men who constitute the ruling authorities of the church, known as the "hierarchy;" that they claim supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of the members of the Mormon Church, and that they encourage and believe in polygamy and the practice of polygamous cohabitation and countenance and connive at violations of the laws of the State of Utah and of the United States, and that as a member of the hierarchy REED SMOOT should be held guilty of any crime committed by any member of the hierarchy and should be held equally guilty of any of the violations of the laws of the State of Utah or of the United States by members of that self-perpetuating body.

I listened, Mr. President, with a great deal of interest to the eloquent denunciation of the crime of polygamy by Mr. BURROWS, the senior Senator from Michigan, in his speech here the other day, and I sympathize with him fully in his arraignment of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. I think it is a relic of a barbarous age, and as such I denounce it. It is the destroyer of the ideal American home life and the corrupter of the morals of those who practice it.

I share also, Mr. President, in the condemnation which the Senator launched against Brigham Young and other leaders of the church who, in their day and generation, promulgated and practiced this crime upon their followers. But, Mr. President, Brigham Young and the present head of the Mormon Church are not on trial before the Senate of the United States. Brigham Young has long since passed from this life into another world and there, according to the beliefs of Protestants and Catholics alike, before a just Judge, will pay the full penalty for the crimes he committed while on earth. The present head of the Mormon Church is destined in the fullness of time to go before the same tribunal and to have his acts and deeds passed upon by the same impartial Judge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have listened with profound interest to the unanswerable argument of the Senator from Illinois to the effect that no Senator is to be criticised or his title to be assailed by reason of something he may have done before his State elected him a member of this body. In that connection, not only has Brigham Young passed to his rest, not only is it conceded, in spite of the belief of the people, that Mr. SMOOT is not a polygamist, but he never was one. So that not only does this offense of which he is popularly supposed to be guilty not attach to him now, but it never did attach to him.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it is worth while to call particular attention to that fact, because in the minds of the people of the country I think everybody knows that Mr. SMOOT is apparently being tried because he is a polygamist, whereas it is not only proved that he is not, but it is gladly admitted that he is not and that he never has been.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. It is only for a moment.

The protest against REED SMOOT is what he is being tried on. It is set forth thoroughly in the record. It is not in the minds of the people or of Senators that he is being tried because he ever has been or is now a polygamist.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is pertinent in a debate of this kind to refer to what exists in the minds of the public—what the people have been led to believe. We, as a court, will of course try Senator SMOOT upon the record. But it has been given out to the people in numberless methods that Mr. SMOOT, a polygamist, is occupying a seat in the Senate of the United States; that a violator of our laws in that particular is holding a seat in this body. That is entirely untrue, and from now on in this debate the American people ought to know what those who are against Mr. SMOOT admit, but what is not popularly known—that he not only not now is, but never has been a polygamist, and, on the contrary, his home life is pure and perfect.

Mr. HOPKINS. I recognize what the Senator from Indiana says is true.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if it is not true that the Presbyterian Church embraces in its creed, or its confession of faith, or whatever it may be called, the doctrine of infant damnation? If so, I should like to ask him whether all members of the Presbyterian Church can be held accountable for that doctrine when many of them do not believe it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not rise, Mr. President, either to praise or to condemn the Presbyterian Church. I have very many dear friends who owe allegiance to that church and to its doctrines, and I know them to be good citizens wherever they live, and that they exercise a Christian influence where their influence has been exerted at all. I am not here for the purpose of discussing any other religious sect. We all know that the human race, from its earliest stages, has developed through bloody wars in the name of religion, and it is not for me to speak of the history of any of the different churches, because I know that in the twentieth century they are all exerting a profound and beneficial influence upon mankind.

My purpose to-day will be to show to the Senate and the people of this country that whatever crimes may have been committed in the earlier history of the church in the name of Mormonism is not for us to condemn or condone here. We have only to consider the personnel of REED SMOOT and his relations to the church since he became a member of this body. If it shall appear, Mr. President, from a careful analysis of the testimony which has been taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections that REED SMOOT is guilty of the crimes charged against the Mormon Church by the eloquent and distinguished Senator from Michigan in his speech, then I say we should all unite in expelling him from the Senate.

If, however, Mr. President, it shall appear from a candid consideration of all the testimony which has been presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections that REED SMOOT stands forth guiltless of any offense punishable by law or any conduct unbecoming a Christian gentleman, then the mere fact that he is a member of the Mormon Church, or that he is an apostle in that church, should not debar him from exercising the rights of a Senator in this body, and should not deprive the State of Utah, which, under our Constitution, has the same rights and privileges accorded to any one of the original thirteen States, from having a full representation in the United States Senate.

I shall, Mr. President, before I close, trace somewhat briefly the history of the Mormon Church and note the character and conduct of some of the men who have been prominently identified with that church from its organization to the present time. But I shall not follow the example set by the Senator from Michigan and declare against the church and against Senator SMOOT simply because I find that in some period of the history of the church its leaders have been violators of law and it has taught doctrines that in this generation are condemned by all right-minded citizens. If this line of argument, which was so largely indulged in by the Senator from Michigan, should have a controlling influence in the Senate or in the country, would a member of any one of the churches, either Protestant or Catholic, be safe?

If we are to charge a member of a Christian church with all the crimes that have been committed in its name, where is the Christian gentleman in this body who would be safe in his seat?

It must be conceded, Mr. President, that the Mormons are sincere and honest in their religious convictions. Senator SMOOT, as an apostle in the church, has no control over the temporal or business affairs of the members of that church. His business is to preach the gospel.

Senator SMOOT is a Christian man. That he believes that God interests Himself in the affairs of men is no more than a belief that is professed by all Christian people. One of the earliest lessons that is taught in childhood by Christian parents is to inculcate the belief in the children that in their little troubles they should go to their closets and pray God for light and guidance, and that He will help them. It is this belief that God does take an interest in the affairs of men that has made the Christian church the power for good that it has been in the world. You take that doctrine away and you destroy in a large measure the beneficent influence that has been exerted upon mankind in all ages during the Christian era.

Many things have been done in the name of the Mormon Church in its earlier history which are condemned by all right-thinking men, not only outside of that church, but in the church as well. The Mormon people have become better educated, their spiritual vision has become clearer, and they now condemn as heartily as we do many acts that were regarded in the days of Brigham Young as in accordance with the word of God. This moral elevation and spiritual improvement, which has been noted in the Mormon Church in the last twenty years, is but a repetition in another form of what is found in the history of all of the various churches, both Protestant and Catholic.

Mr President, we can see from the testimony that appears before the Committee on Privileges and Elections that the Mormon Church is undergoing a radical change for the better.

REED SMOOT is an apostle of this higher and better Mormonism. He stands for the sacred things in the church and against polygamy and all the kindred vices connected with that loathsome practice. In his position as a member of the church, and as an apostle and preacher of the doctrines of the church, he has done more to stamp out this foul blot upon the civilization of Utah and the other Territories where polygamy has been practiced than any thousand men outside of the church.

I dissent in toto, Mr. President, from the conclusions reached by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] regarding the influence of the Mormon Church at the present time on the temporal affairs of its people and also on the conclusion that he sought to establish that polygamy is still a part of the religion and practice of the Mormon Church as such.

With the indulgence of the Senate, I shall take a little time to trace the history of the church and its relation to the Government of the United States during the Territorial history of Utah and what has been done since to destroy polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

The founder of the church, Joseph Smith, was killed in Hancock County, Ill., in 1844. This was the culmination of a long series of troubles that had existed between the Gentiles and the Mormons, in Missouri first, and later in Illinois. The leaders of the church, after the death of Smith, decided to abandon their home at Nauvoo, Ill., and seek a new place for the establishment of their church and their homes, beyond the authority of the State and Federal governments. Under the leadership of Brigham Young they traversed the Great Plains of the West, and never stopped in their onward march until they reached the Great Salt Lake in Utah, then a part of the territory of the Republic of Mexico. Here they pitched their tents and commenced to build in this wilderness their churches and their homes. This Mexican territory became a part of the United States under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, and the Mormon people again became amenable to the laws of the American Republic.

Brigham Young at this time was the recognized leader of the Mormon people. He had promulgated the doctrine of polygamy and claimed that the martyred Joseph Smith had received directly from God the authority for Mormons to marry plural wives and practice polygamous cohabitation.

After Utah became a part of the possessions of the United States it was organized into a Territory, and in 1850 Brigham Young, then the husband of several wives, was made the governor of the Territory. He was nominated by President Fillmore and his appointment was confirmed by the Senate. In 1852, two years after this appointment, he publicly proclaimed polygamy as the doctrine of the Mormon Church and it was accepted and practiced by his followers. In 1854, two years after he had publicly proclaimed polygamy as the doctrine of the Mormon Church, he was again nominated by President Pierce for governor of the Territory, and again confirmed by the Senate.

At the time that he was nominated by President Pierce and confirmed by the Senate he was living with many plural wives, and many of his followers were living in polygamous cohabitation. No legislation was passed by Congress on this subject, and it seemed that no successful protest was made against the head of the Mormon Church being made governor of the Territory and Indian agent to represent the Government of the United States with the red men.

The first legislation on this subject was in 1862. In that year Congress passed "An act to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places," etc.

The first section of that statute reads as follows:

That every person having a husband or a wife living who shall marry any other person, whether married or single, in a Territory of the United States, or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall, except in the cases specified in the proviso to this section, be adjudged guilty of bigamy, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 and by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years: Provided, nevertheless, That this section shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage whose husband or wife by such marriage shall have been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living; nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been dissolved by the decree of a competent court; nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been anulled or pronounced void by the sentence or decree of a competent court on the ground of the nullity of the marriage contract.

Senators will note from reading the statute that while it prohibited plural marriages and made the same bigamy, it did not punish or in any manner interfere with the continued cohabitation of those who had previously entered into the polygamous relations.

It was not until the 22d of March, 1882, under what is known as the Edmunds Act, that polygamous cohabitation became punishable under the laws of the United States.

Sections 3 and 7 of the Edmunds Act read as follows:

SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 7. That the issue of bigamous or polygamous marriages, known as Mormon marriages, in cases in which such marriages have been solemnized according to the ceremonies of the Mormon sect, in any Territory of the United States, and such issue shall have been born before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1883, are hereby legitimated.

The Edmunds Act, so called, was taken by the leaders of the church at that time as persecution, and they assumed the attitude of martyrs to their religion. Many prosecutions followed and many convictions were had. Prominent Mormons who were guilty of practicing polygamy were driven out of the country into Canada and Mexico and foreign lands. The feeling among the Christian people of the Republic was that not enough had been done to entirely crush out this foul and debasing practice, and hence in 1887 Congress enacted what has since been called the Edmunds-Tucker Act, which changed the rules of evidence so as to make a lawful husband or wife of a person accused of bigamy, polygamy, etc., a competent witness. Not only this, but the law provided for the annulment and dissolution of the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Under both the Edmunds and the Edmunds-Tucker Act all children that had been born to plural wives were made legitimate, so that the children of the third or fourth wife, by act of Congress, could inherit property from the father and have all of the rights that are guaranteed under the laws of our country to the children by the first wife.

There is no question but what many of the Mormons at this time believed that the Federal Government had no constitutional authority to interfere with polygamy or polygamous cohabitation because of its being practiced as a part of the Mormon religion. They were fanatics in this, precisely as Sydney Smith, a hundred years ago, found fanatics in the Methodist Church. They went to the very limit in their opposition to the law, and to show their good faith in this, wrong as we all know them to have been, it is only necessary for me to cite to the Senators the case of Reynolds v. The United States, where he voluntarily came before the courts and furnished the proof of violating the Edmunds law in order to test the question as to whether the Mormon religion, as promulgated by Brigham Young, could be practiced by his followers in spite of the legislation of Congress.

The Supreme Court very properly and justly held that while the Mormons had a right to their religion, and while they had a right to believe that God permitted plural marriages, yet the practice of polygamy as such, being in violation of the laws of our country, could not be indulged, and the court sustained the law in every respect.

This decision and other litigation that was had in the Federal courts in the Territory of Utah and in the Supreme Court of the United States brought the leaders of this church to a realization of the crisis that was upon them, and it was under these conditions that I have here too briefly expressed that the then head of the Mormon Church, Wilford Woodruff, issued what has since been known as the manifesto, the official declaration of which I will here incorporate in my remarks:

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June, or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy, or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, and I deny that either forty or any other number of plural marriages have, during that period, been solemnized in our temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage was performed in the endowment house, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889, but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony. Whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the endowment house was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates during the time specified which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teachings he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF.
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

This manifesto was issued by President Woodruff, as he claimed, by the direct revelation from God. It was presented under the laws of the church to a great convention of Mormons and adopted by them, and in the following years again adopted by the Mormon Church, and thus became a part of the fundamental law of the Mormon Church.

Mr. President, it appeared in evidence during the hearings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections that a plural marriage could be valid in the Mormon Church according to the laws of that church only when celebrated by the president or by somebody authorized by him to celebrate it.

This manifesto, which was issued in September, 1890, by President Woodruff, was adopted at general conference of the members of the Mormon Church October 6, 1890, and thereby became a part of the fundamental law of the church. It can not be repealed or modified except by the action of a similar conference.

Senators will thus see that since the adoption of the manifesto a plural marriage is in violation of the laws of the Mormon Church as it is a violation of the laws of the Federal Government. By its adoption the president of the church himself can not perform a legal plural marriage, and what he can not do he can not authorize anybody else to do; so that, as I have said, there can be no plural marriages under the laws of the church since the manifesto of 1890. Any man who has taken a plural wife since then has not, under the laws of the church, made her his wife. The relation is an adulterous one, punishable both under the laws of the church and the laws of the land.

This was sworn to by President Joseph F. Smith. During the course of his examination by Judge Tayler, this question was propounded by him:

Mr. TAYLER. Is the law of the church, as well as the law of the land, against the taking of plural wives?
Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; I will say——
Mr. TAYLER. Is that the law?
Mr. SMITH. I would substitute the word "rule" of the church.
Mr. TAYLER. Rule?
Mr. SMITH. Instead of law, as you put it.
Mr. TAYLER. Very well. Then to take a plural wife would be a violation of the rule of the church?
Mr. SMITH. It would
Mr. TAYLER. Would it be such a violation of the rule of the church as would induce the church authorities to take it up like the violation of any other rule would do?
Mr. SMITH. It would.

Mr. Brigham H. Roberts testified that he was born in England and came to this country when a boy; that he held the official position of one of the presidents of the seventies in the Mormon Church, and, in addition to that, that he is one of the assistant historians of the church, and also an assistant to President Smith in an organization of young men, an auxiliary organization of the church; that as an author he had written a biography of John Taylor, A New Witness for God, Outlines of Ecclesiastical History, and other works.

In speaking of the force and effect of the manifesto issued by President Woodruff and adopted by the Mormon Church in two of its annual conferences, he said:

I regard the manifesto as an administrative act of the president of the church, accepted by the church, and of binding force upon its members. But I regard it as an administrative act which President Woodruff, holding in his own hands the direct authority controlling that particular matter—that is, the matter of marriages—had a perfect right to make, and the acceptance of that action by the church makes that a positive binding law upon the church.
Mr. TAYLER. And those who do not obey it are subject to the pains and penalties such as a church under its discipline may inflict upon its members who disobey it?
Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. That is the rule of the church against the taking of plural wives.
Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.
Mr. TAYLER. How does its force differ from the force of the rule against polygamous cohabitation?
Mr. ROBERTS. Not at all.
Mr. TAYLER. Then the disobedience of the one is as offensive to the church as the disobedience of the other?
Mr. ROBERTS. I should think it would be.
The CHAIRMAN. And both are of equal binding authority?
Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

Other witnesses testified in a similar manner.

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] said the other day, in his very able speech:

Let me say at the outset, touching the charge that the Senator from Utah is a polygamist, and for that reason disqualified from holding a seat in this body, no evidence was submitted to the committee in support of such allegation, and, so far as the investigation discloses, the Senator stands acquitted of that charge. * * * The Senator stands before the Senate in personal character and bearing above criticism and beyond reproach, and if found disqualified for membership in this body it must be upon other grounds and from other considerations.

I wish, Mr. President, to enforce upon the minds of Senators and the country that all that I have said respecting the personal character of Senator SMOOT and the purity of his life are confirmed by the Senator from Michigan. What reason, then, does the Senator have in insisting that Senator SMOOT shall be expelled from the Senate? He has epitomized the objections urged against him in the three following propositions:

First. That at the time of his election the State of Utah and the legislature thereof were under the complete domination of the Mormon hierarchy, of which he is a member, and that such hierarchy so far "interfered with the functions of the State" as to secure the election of one of its own members and an apostle, and that his certificate of election by the legislature was only the recorded edict of the hierarchy in defiance of the constitutional inhibition that "no church shall dominate the state nor interfere with its functions;"

Second. That this Mormon hierarchy, of which the Senator is a conspicuous member, inculcates and encourages belief in and the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in violation of the laws of the State prohibiting the same and in disregard of pledges made for its suppression; and Third. That the Senator, in connection with and as a member of such organization, has taken an oath of hostility to the Government of the United States incompatible with his obligation as a Senator.

I shall undertake, Mr. President, before I close my remarks, to show that not one of the propositions is supported either in law or in fact, and that the protestants, whose mouthpiece the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is upon the floor of the Senate, have utterly failed to make good any case against REED SMOOT. I shall not, however, Mr. President, discuss the propositions in the order in which they were taken up by the senior Senator from Michigan. I propose to discuss the second proposition first.

The Mormon hierarchy, so called, consists, as I understand it, of the president and his two counselors and the twelve apostles. The Mormon Church is a religious organization, founded, as claimed by the senior Senator from Michigan, by religious and pure-minded men. The doctrine that has brought it into disrepute and which has caused criminal charges to be preferred against many of its members is the doctrine of polygamy, which has been eliminated, as I have already said, from the church doctrine by the manifesto of 1890, so that, as the church exists now, it is a religious organization composed of a president and his two counselors, the twelve apostles, and lesser officers in the church organized somewhat similar to other religious organizations.

The president is the supreme head of the church throughout the world. His two counselors have no direct power other than to advise and counsel with him when called upon. The twelve apostles, who form a part of the hierarchy, have no temporal authority and no religious authority outside of preaching the gospel. Any member of them, however, can be, and frequently is, given certain powers and authority in the church by the president. These apostles are also consulted by the president in church matters whenever he has occasion to call upon any one or all of them, relating to any church matter.

It is made perfectly clear in the testimony of Mr. Talmage and every other intelligent witness who gave evidence on this subject that the church organization is primarily and wholly for the religious betterment of mankind. Among other things that Mr. Talmage said in the course of his testimony before the Committee on Privileges and Elections was the following:

Mr. TALMAGE. The first presidency, as I have stated, is composed of three high priests, who are known as the presiding high priests over the church. The quorum has general direction of all church affairs throughout the world. The quorum of apostles has no jurisdiction as a quorum, nor has any member—that is, any individual apostle—any jurisdiction personally in the organized stakes and wards of the church while the first presidency is acting, except as the individual apostle or the quorum may be directed to take charge and exercise supervision for the time being in any part. In other words, the quorum of apostles is not a quorum of local presidency in any sense of the term, and the apostles operate in the organized stakes and wards of the church as teachers and preachers without any authority at all in the matter of enforcing any command or counsel or requirement. Indeed, they have no authority to make or to enforce such, if it were made, unless they act, as I said, by special appointment as representatives of the first presidency. As a representative, by special appointment, of the first presidency, any high priest could act, if so called. But the apostles have a specific work that is required of them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, what is that?

Mr. TALMAGE. That is the work pertaining to missionary labor, particularly outside the organized wards and stakes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Their principal duty is that of missionaries outside of organized stakes?

Mr. TALMAGE. Yes, sir.

This is the "criminal body" that it is charged Senator SMOOT is a member of; and because of that membership it is insisted by the protestants and by the Senators who have already spoken against Senator SMOOT that he should be expelled from this body.

I undertake to say, Mr. President, that there is no evidence that was taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections that supports the charge that the apostles, as a religious organization, is a criminal organization. There is no testimony that can be found within the covers of the four volumes of testimony that I have here before me, which includes all of the evidence which was heard before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that even tends to support the allegation so broadly made by the Senators who seek to expel REED SMOOT from the Senate of the United States. I will not say, Mr. President, that they have willfully misrepresented the evidence; I will not say that they have deliberately sought to mislead the Senate on that important subject; they have failed, as it seems to me, to discriminate between the apostles as a religious organization in the Mormon Church and the individual acts of some of the members of that organization. The object and purpose for which the apostolic organization exists is to inculcate religious doctrine into the minds of the people throughout the civilized world and to lead them to espouse the doctrines of the Mormon Church with polygamy eliminated.

Now, that some of the members of the organization still indulge in polygamous cohabitation and in their hearts believe that the doctrine of polygamy is of divine origin does not make the organization a criminal organzation. The apostles, since the manifesto of 1890, according to the testimony of all of the witnesses who have given evidence upon that subject, do not preach the doctrine of polygamy or encourage polygamous cohabitation. It is not what a man believes, but what he does, that makes him a criminal.

Mr. President, we have had an exhibition here to-day that furnishes a splendid illustration of the position which I have just now taken. We all know, as was expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and others to-day, that there are honorable Senators upon this floor who as firmly believe that the Confederate States had a legal right to secede and form a separate and independent government as did the leaders of that great movement who put their beliefs into action and organized civil war. They, however, like the Mormons of to-day, have accepted the results of the war and have come back into the Union and taken their share of the burdens and benefits of a reunited Republic. Their beliefs regarding the righteousness of their cause, with many of them, is as firm to-day as it was in the bloody days from '61 to '65. That belief, however, does not make them traitors to their country, and the belief of any number of the members of the Mormon Church that polygamy is a principle of divine origin, as long as they do not preach it as a part of the doctrines of the church, can bring no more punishment than can a Senator upon this floor be punished for entertaining the principles of constitutional law that led the brilliant leaders from the South to organize armed opposition to the General Government.

So much, Mr. President, for the individual belief on this subject of polygamy. Now, let us look for a moment, if you please, to the church organization of which REED SMOOT is a member.

As I have already stated, that organization as such is prohibited by the rules of the church from preaching or inculcating in any manner the doctrine that the followers of the Mormon Church have a right to and should indulge in plural marriages. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] quoted a number of decisions of courts of last resort in several States and text writers to establish the following doctrine:

Every person entering into a conspiracy or common design already formed is deemed in law a party to all acts done by any of the other parties before or afterwards in furtherance of the common design. The principle on which the acts and declarations of other conspirators, and acts done at different times, are admitted in evidence against the persons prosecuted is that by the act of conspiring together the conspirators have jointly assumed to themselves, as a body, the attribute of individuality so as regards the prosecution of the common design, thus rendering whatever is done or said by anyone in furtherance of that design a part of the res gestæ and, therefore, the act of all.

I am not inclined to criticise that law. I indorse it in spirit and letter and believe that it expresses the principle which governs the action of men in every State in the Union. The trouble, however, with the law which has been quoted by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is that it has no application to the case of REED SMOOT. This law of individual responsibility is based upon the admitted fact that a criminal conspiracy exists and that the person who is charged with a crime is one of the conspirators; that the common object of the organization of which he is a member is to commit a crime and then whatever is done under such circumstances by one of the conspirators is equally chargeable against the others.

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] cited, in his very able argument here the other day in support of that doctrine, the case of Spies et al. v. The People of Illinois. Spies was indicted and convicted of murder of one Degan, who was killed by a bomb thrown by a fellow-conspirator of Spies at a time when Spies was not present. This doctrine, which I have already quoted from the text writer, was invoked in the courts of Illinois, and it was charged that he was equally guilty with the conspirator who threw the bomb. Before Spies could be charged with criminal offense the State of Illinois was required to show that he was a member of an organization known as the "International Association of Chicago," having for its object the overthrow of the law and the destruction of the Government. It was also shown that these members had advocated the use of bombs and dynamite in any form against the government of the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois and the Federal Government. It was a body reeking with crime, and Spies was one of the leaders of this organization. The conspirator, in throwing the bomb and killing Degan in the city of Chicago, was simply carrying out in spirit and letter the instructions of the organization of which Spies was a prominent member. Under these conditions the trial court held that he was equally guilty with the bomb thrower in the murder of Degan.

This law, however, Mr. President, can have no more application to REED SMOOT than it can have to the Senator from Michigan himself, for the reason, as I have stated, that the Mormon apostles, as an organization, has not been shown to be a treasonable organization or an organized conspiracy to overthrow any of the laws of the State or country.

That some of the apostles have plural wives is a poor argument to be urged for the unseating of Senator SMOOT.

That officers high in the Mormon Church violate the laws of God and man is a matter of the deepest concern to every fair-minded man in the country; but it furnishes a poor excuse for Senators to inflict punishment upon an innocent man simply because he believes in a religion that is advocated by them.

I now come to consider the first point the Senator made as a reason why he proposes to vote to expel Senator SMOOT. As I have stated, it is, in substance, that the State of Utah and the legislature were under the control and domination of the Mormon hierarchy, of which Mr. SMOOT is a member, and that this hierarchy secured his election.

I am somewhat surprised that a lawyer of the ability and a man of the acknowledged intelligence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] should submit a proposition of that character as a reason for depriving Senator SMOOT of his seat in this body. If that principle were to prevail in the spirit and letter with which he has argued it, it would, in one form or another, vacate nearly every seat in this body. The substance of the charge that he has formulated is that a member of the Mormon Church will vote for a Mormon to hold a political office in preference to a person living outside the fold of the church. That is the charge, stripped of the verbiage with which it is surrounded, in the proposition put by the senior Senator from Michigan.

I wish to call to the attention of the Senators that there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that prohibits a State from having an established church. If the people of the State of Michigan can revise their State constitution so as to require the taxpayers of that State to pay annually a certain sum for the maintenance of the Episcopal, the Catholic, the Presbyterian, or the Methodist, or any other church, such a clause in the constitution of Michigan or any other independent State in the Republic would not be antagonistic to anything contained in the Constitution of the United States. When the members of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 assembled in Philadelphia for the purpose of preparing a Constitution that would unite the thirteen separate sovereign States in one confederated Republic, it was not their intention to limit the powers of any one of those States in dealing with their own people. The purpose was to enable them, through this Federal agency, to deal more effectively with foreign powers and between themselves than could be done under the old Articles of Confederation. They proposed to, and did, leave the largest liberty to the people of each one of the separate sovereignties to determine their internal and all domestic affairs as the people from time to time should will. Each State was governed by its own separate constitution, and that constitution could be amended or changed or absolutely destroyed and another one placed in its stead, just as the people willed, in accordance with the terms of the chartered instrument under which they were then living. When they came to provide for additional States to be admitted into the Federal Republic they gave as much liberty to the proposed new State as any of the then thirteen States possessed or should possess after they had adopted the Federal Constitution. So that when Utah became a separate and independent State in the American Republic the people of that State had the same power to adopt a constitution under the Constitution of the United States, and to provide, if you please, in that constitution a tax to support a State church that any one of the original colonies had when it entered into the negotiations that led to the adoption of the Constitution of 1787. That in the whole history of the Republic no State has ever resorted to that is no evidence that the power does not exist, but is a tribute to the independent thought and independent action of the people of the several States in forever keeping separate state and church. It was a wise consideration on the part of the fathers of the Constitution that they left that power with the people themselves, because that power, with the people, can never be abused, as is evidenced by the history now of one hundred and twenty years under that Constitution. More than thirty States have been added to the Republic, and no one of them has ever thought fit to tax the people of the State for the maintenance of an established church.

But, Mr. President, while it is true that the people of no State in this Republic have ever seen fit to make as a part of the organic law of the State any such provision as this, it is a notorious fact that the various religious denominations have, from the earliest history of the Republic, taken a greater or less interest in all public questions and in the politics of the parties that have from time to time controlled the destinies of the Republic. Not only that, but men have combined outside of religious organizations to control cities and States and the Republic itself.

If organizations, religious or otherwise, are to be condemned because they are interested in politics, where would the Senator from Michigan himself be to-day? He belongs to a great political organization that has for its object the controlling not only of the destinies of the State that he so ably represents in this body, but it has the ambition to, and has, as a matter of fact, for more than forty years, controlled the destinies of this Republic itself. Is it any worse for members of a religious organization in any State to prefer one of their own number as a United States Senator than it is for a political organization in the State of Michigan to prefer the senior Senator from Michigan as their representative? If we are to embark upon criticisms of this character, where can we stop?

It is a conceded fact, Mr. President, that the Mormon people outnumber in the State of Utah any other religious sect, and, indeed, they outnumber all other inhabitants of the State. Is there anything unnatural, then, that in an election looking to the selection of a man for United States Senator to represent the interests of that State in this body the majority of the people would prefer to have a man not only in sympathy with them from a political standpoint, but a religious standpoint as well? The Mormon people in the State of Utah, in doing what is charged by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], have not only not committed any crime, but they have followed the principles that govern men in all conditions of life and in all of the different religious denominations. Do not two Baptists—other things being equal—feel a little more kindly toward each other than they do toward two Presbyterians or two Congregationalists? If any favors are to be extended—other things being equal—will not one Baptist favor another rather than a heretic in religion?

The charge, however, made by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] as to the domination of the Mormon Church in all political affairs in Utah, is denied by Senator SMOOT and by a large number of witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it was shown by these witnesses that in Mormon communities where the Mormon vote largely outnumbered the opposition, candidates who did not believe in the doctrines of the Mormon Church were elected to responsible offices. Members of the supreme court of the State have been anti-Mormons, and members of the legislature and various State officers have been pronounced anti-Mormons. My honorable friend at my right [Mr. SUTHERLAND] all his life has not only not been a member of the Mormon Church, but in time and out of time he has publicly and privately denounced plural marriage and polygamous cohabitation, and yet we find a State, with a majority of Mormons in it, sending that gentleman here to represent it in this body.

If it were the fact, as argued to us the other day by the senior Senator from Michigan, that every office, from the lowest to the highest, within the State of Utah is controlled absolutely by some member of the Mormon Church, then this condition as shown by the testimony before the Committee on Privileges and Elections would not exist, and no man who did not acknowledge fealty to the Mormon Church could hold any office, either of high or low degree. I could, had I the time, present to the Senators a long list of names of men who are anti-Mormons and who since the Territory became a State have held important local and State offices.

The people of Utah are divided, not on religious lines, but on industrial and economical lines. Senator SMOOT is a pronounced protectionist, and the majority of the people of that State are of his faith on this industrial question, as are the majority of the people of the State of Michigan of that belief politically; and it was, as I gather from a careful examination of the testimony, upon this branch of the case as presented to our committee that Senator SMOOT was selected, because he more nearly represented the views of the majority of the people on all industrial and economical questions than his opponent. He was selected precisely as my honored friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was selected to represent his State in this great legislative body.

I think I am safe in saying, Mr. President, that neither the majority in this Senate nor the people in the country will indorse the views of the senior Senator from Michigan that Senator SMOOT should be deprived of his seat in the Senate because a majority of the people of the State of Utah are of the same religious faith as himself and voted for him in preference to his opponent.

The legislature that elected him was composed of Mormons and non-Mormons. He was elected by the Republicans in the legislature, Mormons and non-Mormons, and was opposed by the Democrats in that body, Mormons and non-Mormons.

Mr. President, the next proposition that was made by the Senator from Michigan, advocating the expulsion of Senator SMOOT from this body, was that the Senator, in connection with and as a member of such organization, has taken an oath of hostility to the Government of the United States incompatible with his obligation as a Senator.

It is conceded, I think, by the Senator from Idaho and by the senior Senator from Michigan that as an apostle Senator SMOOT was not required to and did not take an oath, and that his relations with the Mormon Church, so far as that is concerned, are the same as that of a lay member.

I remember that in the testimony of Mr. Critchlow, who was one of the lawyers from that State who came here to aid the protestants against Senator SMOOT taking a seat, he made the statement that his position was no different from that of a lay member of the Mormon Church. So I wish to get fully before the minds of the Senate that neither the Senator from Idaho not the Senator from Michigan nor any of the advocates of the expulsion of Senator SMOOT from this body claim that the oath he has taken which would disqualify him is an oath that was taken as an apostle of the church, and that had a lay member of that church come here he would be under the same disability that is urged against the Senator from Utah by the Senator from Michigan, if he had gone through the endowment house, and that the oath that is here referred to in this third proposition is not an apostolic oath, but what is known as the "endowment oath." If any person ought to know whether Senator SMOOT has taken such an oath, he himself is that person. He was a witness in his own behalf before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was questioned upon this very subject. He stated that he had taken the endowment oath when a mere boy and gave the circumstances under which the oath was taken. His evidence is that there is absolutely nothing in that oath of the character charged by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. He further stated that not only was it no oath of hostility to the Government of the United States or incompatible with his obligations as a Senator, but that it was purely of a religious character without reference to the obligations that he assumed in this body when he took the oath of office. It is conceded not only by the senior Senator from Michigan that Senator SMOOT is an honorable man, but by every person who has had anything to do with the protestants before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. He says, under the solemnity of an oath before our committee, that there is nothing in the endowment oath that interfered with his taking the oath that he did in this body as a Senator of the United States, and that he is untrammeled, so far as that oath or his connection with the Mormon Church is concerned, in giving absolute fealty in every respect to the Government of the United States. If, Mr. President, there were no other testimony in the case on behalf of Senator SMOOT than his own, I think it should be enough to satisfy Senators, especially in view of the fact that for three years they have noted his conduct as a Senator and have seen in him nothing but the high character that all accord him—that his word should have a controlling force and effect on this question.

The testimony, however, that has been offered upon this branch of the case by those opposed to Senator SMOOT is of a character that would receive but little consideration in a court of justice. Of all the witnesses who testified before our committee there were only seven who made any pretense of testifying about such an obligation. The testimony of these witnesses is all of a vague and indefinite character. The witnesses themselves are untrustworthy or disreputable in character, and the seven combined would receive but little consideration in any court of record in any of the States of the Republic on any question that involved even the property interests of a citizen; much less, then, should they receive consideration here where the rights of a great State are involved, in addition to the reputation of one of the leading citizens of that State. As an illustration of the character of these seven witnesses I challenge the attention of the Senate to the testimony of Mrs. Elliott, who was brought here from Utah to testify regarding this oath. In order to qualify herself to make a proper showing before the committee, the Senate, and the country, she was asked various questions regarding her own record. She testified that she was living with a second husband; that her first husband was dead. She stated when he died, and that after she had lived as a widow for some time, she again married. When the respondent produced his witnesses the first husband of Mrs. Elliott was brought here, and he said he was not only not dead, but that he had been a very live man ever since he and his wife had separated; that he had corresponded continuously with his children, who were with their mother, and that she knew when she testified that he was living and well. Can anybody take evidence of that kind to impeach the character and standing of a citizen like Senator REED SMOOT?

Senator SMOOT is corroborated in his testimony by that of all of the leading witnesses who gave testimony on that subject. While most of them declined to give the endowment oath, they gave as their reason for such declination that it was a secret religious obligation. The same reasons that influence a Mason to decline to reveal the oaths that are taken by a member when he takes the different degrees in that great secret organization influenced these witnesses in declining to give this religious obligation. But each witness was explicit in stating that there was nothing in the obligation that indicated hostility of the Government of the United States. In numbers and character these witnesses overshadowed the testimony of the witnesses who had sworn to such an obligation.

No person, as it seems to me, who can properly analyze testimony can take the evidence that has been offered upon this proposition and arrive at any other conclusion than that Senator SMOOT is right and truthful when he says that he has never taken an obligation that is incompatible with his duty to the Government of the United States or that would influence him as a Senator in this body.

I have not the time to take the testimony of each witness and read it so that Senators can see that the conclusions that I have reached upon this testimony are not only logical but irresistible.

The report signed by the senior Senators from Ohio and Indiana [Mr. FORAKER and Mr. BEVERIDGE] and the junior Senators from Vermont and Pennsylvania [Mr. DILLINGHAM and Mr. KNOX] with myself contains a careful analysis of the testimony on that subject, and I commend it to any doubting Thomas in this body, if such there be on this question.

The oath that was taken by Senator SMOOT when he became a member of the Senate of the United States supersedes any oath that he may have taken at any previous period in his life. It was taken without any mental reservation, and his whole course in the Senate has shown that no obligation that he has taken in life, so far as influencing his conduct, is in conflict with his duty as a United States Senator. I shall therefore, Mr. President, pursue this line of thought no further. There are, however, some questions that I desire to discuss briefly before I close my remarks.

There is a great misunderstanding in the public mind regarding the extent with which polygamous cohabitation is practiced among the Mormons. With a church membership of more than 300,000, in 1890 it was ascertained by a careful census that there were 2,451 polygamous families. Since the manifesto of 1890, as I have already shown, the plural marriages that have taken place in the church have been exceedingly few in number. They have been sporadic and probably do not exceed in number the number of bigamous marriages that can be found in a like population in almost any State in the Union. These polygamous families were all formed prior to the manifesto of 1890. When they were entered into the parties taking on these relations believed that they were justified in the sight of God and man; children were reared under such conditions; and, as I have already shown, the laws of our country have legitimized these children.

The problem that confronted these men who had plural wives after the laws of Congress had legitimized their children by their plural wives was, What should be done with the mothers of their children? Should they be driven into the street penniless and uncared for, or thrown upon society in the anomalous and unenviable position that they would hold? Or should these men who, when they took them as plural wives, believed, as did the women, that the relation was sanctified in the sight of God and that it was pure and exalted by religious approval, care for them?

The consensus of opinion in the State of Utah among the Gentiles as well as the Mormons was that if the husbands of these plural wives cared for them, without flaunting such relations in the face of the public, it would be better to let them care for them along with the children these women had borne them and let time and death solve the ultimate problem of the extinction of polygamy in the Mormon Church.

The leading citizens of Utah who were non-Mormon not only acquiesced in this solution of the problem, but they gave it their sanction by word and act.

I denounce any so-called plural marriages since the manifesto of 1890 in as strong terms as does the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]; but, Mr. President, I want Senators and I want the people of the country to understand that since 1890 there has been an honest effort on the part of the Mormon people to live up to the laws of the land and live up to that manifesto issued by the head of the church.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. May I ask the Senator if, when he states that there has been an honest effort made to live up to the manifesto, he does not lose sight of the fact that at least five of the apostles have taken new wives since the manifesto?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that. One would suppose from the position taken by the Senator from Michigan and by the Senator from Idaho that not only five apostles had taken plural wives, but that they were multiplying these plural marriages as they did before the manifesto of 1890. Can the Senator from Michigan tell me the number of plural marriages in the Mormon Church since 1890?

Mr. BURROWS. The number is shown in the evidence, but I do not now exactly recall it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have it.

Mr. BURROWS. But there have been several.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am going to answer the Senator on that.

Mr. BURROWS. A number of them have taken plural wives.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am going to discuss that fully.

Mr. BURROWS. It does not follow from that that others are taking plural wives, but it is true that the head of the church and some of the apostles have indulged in plural marriage since the manifesto. One thing more. I should like to ask the Senator if the older people are called upon to take care of their wives as a humane act? Is there any reason why they should continue to cohabit with them and increase the number of the offspring?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that on that proposition I will give him the answer of the head of the Mormon Church, which is found in the evidence. It is not necessary for me to make an answer to that proposition. That very question was put to the head of the Mormon Church, who has had a number of children born since the manifesto, and I submit that answer, not only to the Senator, but to Senators in this body and to the public generally.

Now, Mr. President, to come back to my proposition. Mark you, this manifesto was promulgated in 1890, sixteen or seventeen years ago. How many plural marriages have there been since that time? We have here, as I have said, four volumes of testimony. They have raked the entire Mormon Church from Mexico to Canada, and throughout the mountainous States; they have taken every case that they could find, whether the evidence warranted it or not. I have gone through the testimony, and I find that during the sixteen or seventeen years since the manifesto, on their own showing, there have been only twenty so-called "plural marriages"—a little over one year in a population of 300,000. Take the same population in almost any part of the country and there would be nearly the same number of bigamous marriages.

The evidence does not warrant the conclusion that there have been even twenty of these marriages. I base my statement as to the number upon the contention of the protestants themselves, but when you come to sift the evidence it absolutely fails, and if the law that governs testimony in actions dealing with property and lives in the courts of our country were to be invoked, they could not show five cases of this kind.

The Senator has suggested that five of the apostles have taken plural wives. I met that proposition when I showed that if these men had violated the law, the apostles and the church itself did not preach the doctrine of polygamy. I met that when I showed that this manifesto is sent out by the missionaries, is scattered broadcast in the church, and is acquiesced in as one of the doctrines of the church to-day. That one individual or five individuals violate the law can not make a criminal out of a church of 300,000 people. That one man or five among the apostles violate the law can not make REED SMOOT a criminal, any more than the Senator from Michigan would be a criminal because some Senator sitting near him might violate the law. REED SMOOT has no control over the individual actions of the apostles any more than the Senator from Michigan has control over the individual actions of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, as I have said, it is not my purpose to take up very much more time of the Senate in the discussion of this question.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator may have explained, but I did not understand him if he did, whether in the case of the twenty polygamous marriages which have been celebrated since 1890 the ceremony was performed by the church in all of them or any of them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that. Under the rules and regulations of the church a plural marriage, even in polygamous days, was not a legal marriage, unless it was performed by the president of the church or by somebody designated by him.

Since the manifesto of 1890 neither the president nor any other official of the church has authorized a plural marriage, and none has taken place in a Mormon church or in a sanctuary of any character belonging to the Mormon Church within the limits of the United States. The alleged taking of plural wives among the apostles, mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, occurred in Canada or Mexico, outside of the limits of our own country. This is enough to show that those individuals when they left their own country recognized that they had left their church, and that they were not only violating the laws of the Mormon Church, but that they were violating the laws of our country as well. So they went to a foreign country to consummate this relation. I showed, Mr. President, in my earlier remarks that that relation is an adulterous one in the eyes of the Mormon Church, the same as it is among the Gentiles themselves.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask the Senator from Illinois, if he will allow me, if the Mormon Church has undertaken to punish any of these polygamists for entering into this adulterous relation?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will answer my friend from Idaho by saying that the other day I read in a newspaper that a member of a religious organization in one of the Western States had committed the crime of bigamy. I ask the Senator if he knows whether the members of his church have prosecuted that man? One question is as fair as the other. It is not necessary in order to clear the skirts of REED SMOOT, or any lay Mormon in the church, that he should prosecute a person for committing a crime. The obligation is upon the Senator himself with the same degree of responsibility as it is upon any member of the church. If he knows that a man has violated the law it is his duty, according to his own code of ethics, to present that evidence to a grand jury to have them indict him. Has he gone and presented these charges to the grand jury in the State of Utah or in Salt Lake City?

Mr. DUBOIS. I myself have not.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all I want to know.

Mr. DUBOIS. But the people of Utah have gone, and the courts of Utah have paid no attention to the presentation, and it is useless.

Mr. HOPKINS. Where a crime is committed and nobody follows it up, the criminal goes unwhipped of justice. That is true outside of the Mormon Church as it is true inside of the church; and if they had legal evidence of any of these apostles taking plural wives, why have they not prosecuted them instead of coming here and seeking to punish a man who has done more than any thousand people in this country to stamp out the crime of polygamy? They are trying to punish a man who has shown that he possesses the qualities of heart and head to do all in his power to stop this crime, and yet because some members of the church violate the law, these honored Senators say that he should be expelled from the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In answer to the Senator's question, whether the Senator from Illinois could cite an instance where there had been any punishment by another Mormon of Mormons for having entered into polygamous relations, I have not read the testimony recently, but the Senator has, and I call his attention to a case, as I remember it, when I was present when the testimony was being taken. I believe it was a bishop of a stake by the name of Harmer, who had taken another wife, and the attention of the Senator from Utah, not then a Senator, was called to it. The bishop himself went to Provo, the home of the Senator from Utah, not then a Senator, and told him about this thing, about which there was a great deal of rumor. The upshot of the whole matter, as I remember the testimony—and the Senator from Illinois will know about what it was—was that on his way home from Provo this bishop of the stake, who had entered into relationships with more than one woman, was arrested by the sheriff, was by the church authorities deposed from the bishropric, and was prosecuted and finally sent to the penitentiary. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but that is as I remember it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. He himself testified to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Vermont suggests that it was the bishop himself who testified to that fact.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me, I will show the difference. Bishop Harmer was not married to the second woman. He was living with her in a purely adulterous relation. Therefore the Mormon Church made an example of him. Had she been married to him as a second wife, they would not have interfered, because they never have done so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, the Senator's suggestion is——

Mr. HOPKINS. Right here let me say a word.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have shown, Mr. President, that there can not be in the Mormon Church to-day the taking of a plural wife. That is an impossibility under the law of the church, and the relation is an adulterous one, just as stated by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho in answer is that the reason why they deposed him from his religious office and the reason why they sent him to the penitentiary for a criminal offense is that he did not marry the woman.

Mr. DUBOIS. Exactly; precisely.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, according to that, the Senator from Idaho must go on and show that it is the habitual practice to persecute people out there if they do not contract polygamous marriages, which, of course, is reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will state that I am pretty familiar with the Harmer case referred to, although I do not now recall precisely what the evidence showed about it.

Mr. Harmer was a bishop in the county in which my colleague lives. It was very clearly shown when he was arrested that he had gone to Mexico and had married his plural wife there. By the way, Utah has a law upon the subject of polygamy, forbidding and punishing it. Mr. Harmer could not be prosecuted under the law of the State of Utah because the offense was not committed in that jurisdiction. The only thing for which he could be prosecuted was the crime of adultery. He was prosecuted for that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not only is that the fact, but I happen to know something further about it. My colleague himself spoke to one of the civil officers of the county, the sheriff of the county, whom I know very well. The sheriff of the county investigated the case. The sheriff was a Mormon. This man was arrested. He was prosecuted by a Mormon district attorney and was convicted before a Mormon judge and sent to the penitentiary for eighteen months. That is the history of the case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Upon the original information of the Senator from Utah himself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Not only that, but, as I am informed and as I have every reason to believe is the fact, after this man had been in the penitentiary for something less than a year, an effort was made to secure his pardon, and a petition was presented to my colleague, who declined to sign it. He declined to ask for the man's pardon.

As I say, I do not recall what the evidence was, but I state what I know about it because I happened to reside in Utah County at the time, within 6 miles of where it happened.

Mr. HOPKINS. I thank the Senator for giving us the information he has upon that subject, and I want to emphasize to the Senate a fact which appears in the evidence before the committee, and that is that the younger Mormons throughout the length and breadth of the State of Utah and wherever the Mormon Church is located are opposed to polygamy and polygamous cohabitation as much as is the Senator from Michigan himself.

That time and death will speedily end this blot upon the church and upon the civilization of our country as well is evidenced from the fact that in October, 1899, nine years after the first census had been taken, the number of polygamous families had been reduced to 1,543. Another investigation was made in May, 1902, as to the number of polygamous families in the Mormon Church, and the 1,543 families had dwindled to 897. At the time that this case was being considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections it was stated without question by the leading counsel for Senator SMOOT that the number of polygamous families in existence to date had been reduced by death to about 500.

Mr. President, in the short space of sixteen or seventeen years the number of polygamous families in the Mormon Church has been reduced from 2,451 to 500. Those that remain are old men and old women, and in a few years the 500 will be entirely blotted out. Then the Mormon Church will stand forth freed not only from preaching and inculcating the doctrine of plural wives and polygamous cohabitation, but in the practice of the church it will be freed from having a solitary polygamous family within its fold.

I can understand how some fanatics may say that this method of dealing with this crime upon our civilization is too charitable and that the strong arm of the law should take these gray-haired offenders, both men and women, and punish them to the limit of the law. The experience of mankind, however, Mr. President, is entirely against such drastic measures. Persecution (or what seems to the prosecuted persecution) simply inflames the spirit of the martyr, and instead of stifling the offense or crime of polygamy, it stimulates the fanatics in the church to practice it and to preach it, believing that by so doing they are earning eternal salvation and a higher and better place near the throne of God.

The overwhelming sentiment in Utah and in the adjoining States where the Mormon Church exists is in favor of eliminating the last vestige of polygamous cohabitation in the church by time rather than the adoption of the drastic measures that I have already referred to. The leading Gentiles of Utah favor this plan. They believe it to be more humane and more effective than to make martyrs of those who still adhere to the plural wives taken by them prior to the manifesto of 1890. This problem of plural wives and polygamous cohabitation is one that our missionaries have met with in their missionary fields in the Orient.

In a book published in 1904 by Harlan P. Beach, entitled "In India and Christian Opportunity," in dealing with the general subject of problems connected with new converts, the author says, on page 222:

> Polygamy.—One difficulty in the way of receiving a professed convert, though affecting only a small percentage of candidates, is a most perplexing one; it is that of applicants who have more than one wife. As Hindoo or Mohammedan they have entered in good faith into marriage contracts with these wives, and if a man puts away all but one what provision shall be made for the rejected, and on what principle shall he decide as to the one to be retained? * * * Some good missionaries hold that where the husband is living the Christian life in all sincerity it is better to receive into the church such a candidate, though not eligible to any church office, than to require him to give up all but one wife and thus brand with illegitimacy his children by them, as well as occasion the wives so put away endless reproach and embarrassment.

The Rev. John P. Jones, D. D., in a book which he published in 1903, in treating of this same subject, said:

> If it be demanded of the man that he put away all but one of those wives taken in heathenism, then we ask whether it is Christian or even just to cast away one to whom he was solemnly and religiously pledged according to the laws of the land and with whom he has been linked in love and harmony for years, and from whom he has begotten children? * * * It is not easy, on Christian grounds, to decide such a problem as this; nor is it very Christian to put a ban upon any woman who, in accordance with their religion and their country's laws, has formed this sacred alliance with a man and has lived with him for years; nor can it be right to brand with illegitimacy the children born of such a wedlock.

I cite these authors, Mr. President, to show that men of liberal views, but sincere Christian spirit, find it difficult to meet and solve the problem among the converts to the Christian religion in the Orient. The highest authority on this subject counsels toleration and the recognition of the convert to the rights of the Christian church, although he may still hold to his plural wife.

These examples show the questions that our missionaries are meeting with constantly. These men have been taught, from their experience in countries where polygamy is practiced, the doctrine of charity, and have recommended practically the same course toward the converts to Christianity—where these converts have plural wives—that has been adopted by the people of Utah and the other Western States where polygamy once held sway as a part of the doctrines and teachings of the Mormon Church.

It is not, however, for the Senate of the United States, Mr. President, to determine which course should be pursued to eliminate forever this last vestige of barbarism on the civilization of our times. We have only to deal with Senator SMOOT and his record, and that alone must determine our action. From the consideration that I have given to it, and for the reasons that I have here expressed, I feel, Mr. President, that I would be false to the oath that I have taken were I to vote to expel him from the Senate of the United States, and I shall, therefore, when the time comes for the Senate to determine this momentous question, cast my vote in favor of his retaining his seat.

Mr. CULLOM obtained the floor.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DUBOIS. Just for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I can not yield. I have been yielding all day.

Mr. DUBOIS. Just a moment? I want to ask the junior Senator from Illinois a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has not yielded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to ask your colleague a question.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator may ask a question, but I can not yield for any length of time.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to ask the junior Senator from Illinois a question. I have not interrupted him during his very interesting discourse. He has referred a number of times to the testimony which shows that Senator SMOOT is an opponent of polygamy; that he does not believe in polygamy; that he differs with the president of his church in regard to that. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois when he is revising his remarks to indicate where publicly at any time or place REED SMOOT has opposed polygamy in any form. Let him indicate in what part of the testimony such references can be found.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not put in my speech any more than I have said, but I will say to the Senator that the proposition he has made here is one that he has discussed twenty, forty, or a hundred times before the committee. The whole life of Senator SMOOT is a protest against polygamy. Every act that he has engaged in, either in the church or outside of it, is a condemnation of it. It is not necessary for a man to go up and shake his fist in the face of another to show his disapproval. It is not necessary for Mr. SMOOT to stand up in the tabernacle and say, "I denounce President Smith" or this man or that man, to show that he is opposed to the practice of polygamy. His whole life, Mr. President, is what I put in evidence to show the fact that he is an opponent of the practice of polygamy, and the Senator from Idaho himself dare not stand upon this floor or say before any audience that knows the facts that REED SMOOT has not been a consistent and persistent opponent of the practice of polygamy,

Mr. DUBOIS. I do say so distinctly——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not; not at present.

Mr. DUBOIS. The junior Senator from Illinois said this was in the testimony in regard to Senator SMOOT's opposition to polygamy. It is not a fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be time hereafter to discuss this question.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, who I understand wishes to make a request.

REVISION OF UNITED STATES PENAL LAWS.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States, as reported by the special committee, may be made the unfinished business. I do not wish to call it up now or to interfere with the appropriation bill, but simply that it may be made that order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 7709 may be made the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. What would be the effect of such an order, if adopted?

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that I will give way any time when the Senator wishes to bring up the Smoot case.

Mr. BURROWS. For the present I shall object.

Mr. KEAN. Let us go on with the regular order.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the committee be considered as the reading progresses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand two hundred and twenty" and insert "four thousand;" and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand seven hundred and sixty" and insert "seven thousand five hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Vice-President: For secretary to the Vice-President, $4,000; messenger, $1,440; telegraph operator, $1,500; telegraph page, $600; in all, $7,540.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 146, line 22, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "eight hundred and ninety" and inserting "six hundred and forty;" so as to make the total appropriation in that paragraph $51,640.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 146, line 23, after the word "compensation," to insert "at not more than $10 per day;" on page 147, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation, at not more than $10 per day, and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton; and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On line 25, page 150, I move to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to make the appropriation for "four chief statisticians of the Census Office" $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 151, line 1, after the word "dollars" to insert "and $500 additional for acting as Director of the Census in the absence of that officer, and for superintending census publications;" so as to read:

The Census Office: For Director, $6,000; four chief statisticians, at $2,500 each; chief clerk, $2,500, and $500 additional for acting as Director of the Census in the absence of that officer, and for superintending census publications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the Census Office, on page 151, line 14, before the word "skilled," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four thousand three" and insert five thousand eight;" so as to read:

Electrician, $1,000; three skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; four skilled laborers, at $900 each; ten watchmen; five messengers; two firemen; five assistant messengers; ten skilled laborers, at $720 each; seven unskilled laborers, at $720 each; four messenger boys, at $480 each; twenty-four charwomen; in all, $705,860.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 151, line 21, I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "five" and inserting "seven;" so as to make the total $707,860.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 152, line 7, after the word "law," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$525,000, of which amount $150,000 to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, and periodical reports of the domestic and foreign consumption of cotton, per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of the same and of detailed employees, the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records, the temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia for supervising special agents, and the employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting the statistics required by law, $525,000, of which amount $150,000 to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 153, line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" and in line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twelve thousand nine" and insert "thirteen thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

For assistant or deputy clerk, $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For crier, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For three stenographers, one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice, at $900 each; in all, $33,720, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 164, after line 2, to strike out:

For pay of a custodian of the building occupied by the Court of Claims, to be paid on the order of the court, $500.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have that amendment disagreed to, but at the suggestion of the Senator in charge of the bill, I am entirely willing to leave it to the committee of conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 164, line 19, after the word "persons," to insert "permanently;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service, and the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 164, after line 21, to strike out sections 4 and 5, as follows:

SEC. 4. On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and Vice-President of the United States shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

SEC. 5. On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of heads of Executive Departments who are members of the President's Cabinet shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he is not willing that these last proposed amendments shall go over?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to any provision looking to the question of fixing the salaries of the Cabinet officers, the Vice-President, the Speaker of the House, and members of the House and Senate going over. I am willing to let the subject go over until to-morrow or some other day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to say that I have noticed in certain papers, supposed to know what was done in the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, that it is stated that I offered an amendment increasing the salaries of Congressmen and that it was not agreed to by the committee. My associates on that committee will bear me out in stating that no amendment of that character was offered.

Mr. HALE. The action of the committee was entirely unanimous.

Mr. NELSON. I understand the committee report no increases?

Mr. HALE. No increases anywhere in that direction.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, let the bill go over as it stands, and I will call it up to-morrow morning or some other time that may be agreed upon.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not understand what the Senator from Illinois said.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to let the bill go over now, the reading having been finished, to be disposed of to-morrow morning or some other time.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the committee will agree to the amendment, of which I gave notice, increasing the salary of the disbursing officer of the Post-Office Department $250. He disburses a large amount of money and he gives a large bond, which is a burden to him. Officers of that grade are generally paid $2,500, as I understand.

Mr. CULLOM. What is this officer getting?

Mr. FORAKER. Twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars, and my amendment is to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred," so as to pay him what other officials of the Government of that class get.

Mr. CULLOM. We have just stricken out a part of the salary where a disbursing officer was receiving $2,750 and cut it down to $2,500.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to meet you half way——

Mr. CULLOM. I will consult with the Senator to-morrow with reference to the official to whom he refers and see what can be done about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I am willing to let it go over, but I was afraid I might not be here when it came up.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 12, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 11, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOHN INGRAM.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (H. R. 18214) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John Ingram."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ETIENNE DE P. BUJAC.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following privileged resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to request the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate certified copy of an engrossed bill (S. 4926) for the relief of Etienne De P. Bujac, the original bill having been lost.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills in order for consideration to-day be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills in order to-day be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] will take the chair.

HERMAN HAGEMILLER.

The first pension business was the bill (H. R. 18969) granting an increase of pension to Herman Hagemiller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Herman Hagemiller, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $34 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

In line 8 strike out the word "four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 189. An act to establish a life-saving station at the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:
